Full Name: Before marrying King HaliourLayern Patton I, Walica Kevena Patton was known as Walica Banain, the only daughter of Dures the Great, also called Dures Banain.

House/Family: House Patton (Through Marriage), The Banain's (Maiden Family/Pre-Marriage) Ethnicity: Aicruaeae-Barie (People with typically light to fair skin tones, sometimes with pink or cool undertones. Their noses are often narrow or straight-bridged; the tip may be pointed or softly rounded. Walica's eyes were clear, pale blue, and slightly almond-shaped with a visible upper eyelid crease and gently rounded lower lids. She had slightly bushy eyebrows that were moderately defined to frame her eyes. Walica's nose was small and straight, she had full gently curved lips. Her hair was light brown with a warm undertone. Her hair was slightly wavy and long falling all the way to her waist. She was roughly 5'6" with a slender build, she had narrow shoulders and a lean frame.

Nation: Aicruae

HISTORICAL SIGNIFICANCE

Known For: Walica Kevena Patton is known for being the wife of King Haliour Layern Patton I, Known for being the daughter of Dures the Great, and the mother of Prince Benjaie Nefest Patton (who would go on to become King Benjaie Nefest Patton), Princess Aliedea Cawiloan Patton, and Princess Narseai Bekan Patton.

Major Accomplishments: Besides giving birth to three Patton heirs; Prince Benjaie Nefest Patton, Princess Aliedea Cawiloan Patton, and Princess Narseai Bekan Patton. Queen Walica stabilized House Patton at a time when everyone wanted it to fail, so they could claim the title for themselves; she helped secure the most successful line to ever exist. She securely placed her son Prince Benjaie Nefest Patton and he became King Benjaie Nefest Patton of Aicruae.

Major Failures: Queen Walica's greatest personal failure was her inability to earn the respect of the Aicruaeae court during her husband's lifetime. Despite being the only daughter and heir of the most powerful warlord in the region, her father Dures's brutal reputation preceded her, and she inherited the hatred and distrust that others felt toward the Banain's. She was also unable to compete with Lenkitta Arvento for her husband's attention and affection. Additionally, she lost her youngest daughter Princess Narseai Bekan Patton in infancy (8,748 BR - 8,747 BR), and despite her efforts to guide her son Benjaien, he grew to resent and openly hate her, wishing her dead and blaming her for controlling his life.

How History Remembers Them: At the time of Warriors age her family (The Benain's) was the most powerful in the region in what was to become the country of Aicruae. When she was born her mother Tehesti Benain had succumbed to the illness from childbirth. But, since her birth, she was loved by her father and constantly protected by him during one of the most turbulent times in history. But, when she reached age twenty, a new man, King Haliour Layern Patton I, arose to claim the region/land as his. Walica for the first time in her life watched her father, Dures the Great, bow to another man, King Haliour Layern Patton I, and call him king. Dures the Great offered the newly twenty year old Walica as King Haliour Layern Patton I's bride. Walica married King Haliour Layern Patton I but her life was far from perfect, from afar she watched as her husband (King Haliour Layern Patton) doted on Lenkitta Arvento and while everyone publicly claimed Walica as their queen they held little respect for her because her father Dures, had resigned the region for quite some time and had earned a nasty reputation, because of that Walica took on hate because of her connection to him and the The Banain's. It wasn't until her husband's death in 8,736 BR that Walica was fully able to prove that she was Dure's daughter by coming out of the shadow and acting as her son Prince Benjaien Nefest Patton's regent. Since her son was still "young" she acted as his regent for six years until he officially took full power at the age of 24 . Queen Walica Kevena Patton is often referred to as The Mother of the great Aicruaeen Dynasty but among other members of the house, she is often outshadowed as well.

POWER & POSITION

Highest Title Held: Queen of Aicruae

Political Faction: As the first queen, Walica worked to legitimize and stabilize the newly founded Patton dynasty. She maintained connections to her maiden family the Banain's through her cousin Vala and leveraged those relationships to strengthen Patton rule.

Key Allies: Queen Vala Uinara Patton (distant cousin whom she trusted enough to place at her son's side as his wife to monitor his behavior), the Banain family loyalists who remained after her father's defeat, and the court factions who supported a stable regency during Benjaïen's minority.

Key Enemies: Lenkitta Arvento (founder of House Arvento, her husband's close friend and advisor whom he openly favored over Walica), King Benjaïen Nefest Patton (her own son, who hated her and wished her dead), and the noble factions who wanted House Patton to fail so they could claim the throne for themselves.

LEGACY

Immediate Impact: Walica's regency (8, 736BR — 8, 731BR) preserved House Patton during its most vulnerable period. After King Haliour I's death, many powerful factions saw an opportunity to seize power from the young heir Benjaïen. Walica's firm hand prevented civil war and ensured a smooth succession. Her arrangement of Benjaïen's marriage to her trusted cousin Vala was an attempt to maintain influence and stability even after she relinquished the regency.

Long-Term Impact: Walica established the precedent that Patton queens could and would rule as regents when necessary, a tradition that would be invoked multiple times throughout the dynasty's history. Her bloodline through both her son Benjaïen and her daughter Aliedea (who married into House Mena) created the interconnected web of royal and noble lineages that would eventually produce figures like Queen Isalian Liazen and, ultimately, Emperor Solis Elias Patton. Every subsequent Patton ruler traces their lineage back to Walica. Additionally, a later king, King Sayero Walica Patton (8,615 BR - 8,540 BR), was named after her in tribute to her legacy as the mother of the dynasty.

How Later Generations View Them: Queen Walica is viewed with a mixture of reverence and pity. She is honored as "The Mother of the Great Aicruaeen Dynasty" and acknowledged as the woman who stabilized House Patton when everyone wanted it to fail. But, she remains somewhat overshadowed by the more dramatic figures who came after her, particularly the great love story of King Haliour II and Queen Isalian, and the later imperial accomplishments of Solis. Later generations recognize that without her sacrifice and steady governance, there would have been no dynasty to inherit.

Monuments/Memorials: King Sayero Walica Patton was named in her honor. As one of the founding figures of House Patton, she is included in royal genealogies, histories, and the official records of the dynasty. As the first queen she is commemorated in the royal family's ancestral halls and records.

CONNECTIONS TO NARRATIVE

Descendant Characters: Every member of House Patton after her, including Emperor Solis Elias Patton (the protagonist of A Tale of A Thousand Songs), descends from Walica. Her son King Benjaïen Nefest Patton continued the direct royal line, while her daughter Princess Aliedea Cawiloan Patton married Duke Nayiler Mena and produced the lineage that would eventually lead to Queen Isalian Liazen. Solis is her direct descendant through approximately 15-16 generations.

Full Name: Before marrying King Benjaïen Nefest Patton of Aicruae, Vala Uinara Patton was known as Vala Casust, the distant cousin of Queen Walica Kevena Patton, with ties to the Banain's through her mothers side.

Appearance: Vala had a fair, light toned complexion with smooth and even skin. Her eyes were soft blue and fairly wide-set, almond shaped with a slight upward tilt at the outer corners. Her nose was narrow and straight with a subtle bridge and refined tip. Her lips were full and evenly proportioned, with a slight downward curve and natural volume. Her hair was light blonde wavy and fell past her shoulders, her face shape was oval and her face was balanced in width and length, she had a gently tapered jawline and high cheekbones. She was 5'8" and had a slender build, and a notable graceful frame.

Nation: Aicruae

HISTORICAL SIGNIFICANCE

Known For: Vala is known for being the distant cousin of Queen Walica Kevena Patton. Vala is also known for being the Wife of King Benjaïen Nefest Patton of Aicruae, Also known for being the 2nd queen of Aicruae. And the mother of Prince Ilaem Nefest Patton and Princess Cawiloan Heka Patton who would go on to become King Ilaem Nefest Patton I and Queen Cawiloan Heka Patton of Aicruae.

Major Accomplishments:

Major Failures: Queen Vala was unable to win her husband's affection or respect. King Benjaïen despised her from the beginning of their marriage, calling her "an old prude" and resenting that she was older than him and (in his words) "looked more like a king than him." She could not protect herself from his jealousy or his many affairs, and she suffered constant ill health from the strain of bearing his children. Ultimately, she was unable to escape her fate and was most likely murdered by the man she was forced to marry.

How History Remembers Them: Queen Vala was a distant cousin of Queen Walica. Vala's father was Pavim Casust, her mother was Malejia Casust, and she had a younger brother Kaseieke Casust who died in infancy. One of Queen Walica's wishes was that her son, King Benjaien Nefest Patton of Aicruae marry Vala, because Vala was one of her favorite cousins, and she felt as though to control King Benjaien Nefest Patton after giving up her regency that it would be best to appoint someone she trusted by his side to watch over her son who Queen Walica personally called a reckless, irresponsible, bastard. So in 8,732 BR the two (Vala and Benjaien) married each other. King Benjaien Nefest Patton of Aicruae was very childish and was said to have detested and more so loathed Vala's entire existence. He was very aware of his mother's intention of putting Vala by his side leading him to take out his frustration on Vala, calling her an old prude, a worthless bitch and the bane of his existence because Benjaien also hated the fact that Vala was older than him and how as he put it "looked more like a king than him". So because of these facts Vala led a very sad life, she was always the target of jealousy from her husband and at the same time very sickly from giving him children and heirs. Not much is known about her life other than the fact that she was most likely poisoned by her husband.

POWER & POSITION

Highest Title Held: Queen of Aicruae

Political Faction: Vala served as a continuation of Queen Walica's political strategy, representing the Banain family's interests within the royal household and theoretically acting as a check on King Benjaien's worst impulses.

Key Allies: Queen Walica Kevena Patton (her cousin and mother-in-law, who arranged the marriage to monitor her son), Princess Cawiloan Heka Patton (her daughter, who remained fiercely loyal to her mother's memory throughout her life), and the Banain family loyalists at court.

Key Enemies: King Benjaien Nefest Patton (her husband, who openly hated her and likely murdered her), Araner and Jelkita (the king's lovers who replaced her influence after her death and became his chief advisors), and the many other men and women Benjaien took to his bed while Vala was still alive.

Immediate Impact:Vala's death (most likely by poisoning) freed King Benjaien from what he considered the controlling influences of both his mother and his wife.

Ironically, after her death, Benjaien's lovers Araner and Jelkita became his advisors and he finally matured into an effective ruler, accomplishing feats that matched his father's legacy. Some interpret this as proof that Vala was never the problem, Benjaien simply blamed her for his own inadequacies until she was gone.

Long-Term Impact:Vala's children carried her gentle nature and sense of duty into the next generations. Her son Ilaem inherited her sickly constitution but also her diplomatic abilities. Her daughter Cawiloan became one of the most beloved figures in House Patton's history, and Cawiloan's fierce hatred of her father (stemming from his treatment of Vala) influenced court dynamics for decades. When Benjaien died, Cawiloan wore white to his funeral, went to her mother's grave, expelled all of his lovers from court, and forbade anyone from tending to his burial site. This act of filial vengeance ensured that Vala's suffering would not be forgotten.

How Later Generations View Them:. Her story is often contrasted with that of Queen Isalian Liazen, who would later marry into a genuine love match with King Haliour II, a relationship that was everything Vala's marriage was not.

Monuments/Memorials:Vala's grave was maintained and visited by her daughter until Cawiloan's own death.

CONNECTIONS TO NARRATIVE

Descendant Characters:Through her son King Ilaem Nefest Patton I and daughter Princess Cawiloan Heka Patton (who married Ilaem in a consanguineous union typical of early Patton practice), Vala is an ancestor of the entire subsequent Patton line. This includes King Haliour Layern Patton II, King Viake Recreadion Patton, King Sayero Walica Patton, and eventually Emperor Solis Elias Patton. Every Patton after her carries her blood.

Her nose was straight and narrow with a subtle bridge and a refined tip. Her lips were full, with a balanced upper and lower lip. Her hair was pale blonde, long and wavy. She was 5'9", she had a slender frame, with low visible muscle mass, with a look of delicacy and poise.

Nation: Aicruae

HISTORICAL SIGNIFICANCE

Known For: Queen Cawiloan Heka Patton is known for being the 3rd queen of Aicruae. The Mother of King Haliour Layern Patton II, and Princess Asayera Atani Patton. She is also known for being the Wife of King Ilaem Nefest Patton I and The Great Lady of House Patton because she gave birth to King Haliour Layern Patton II of Aicruae.

Major Accomplishments:

Major Failures: Queen Cawiloan opposed her son King Haliour II's wish to marry Isalian Liazen, preferring instead that he marry his sister Princess Asayera Atani Patton to prevent concerns about succession. She and the court "really loved" Princess Asayera and rejected Haliour's choice. This opposition was only resolved when Princess Asayera fell ill with Sela Meysei (Night Terrors) and died three months after Haliour II took the throne. History vindicated Haliour's choice, his marriage to Isalian became one of the most successful royal unions ever and created the second golden age of House Patton. Additionally, her husband King Ilaem, while a good king, was a "terrible father" who neglected his children in favor of his imperial duties, Cawiloan was unable to moderate this behavior. How History Remembers Them: Queen Cawiloan Heka Patton, was nicknamed the Great Lady of House Patton because she gave birth to King Haliour Layern Patton II. Queen Cawiloan Heka Patton was the second child of King Benjaen Nefest Patton. As tradition when a child is born a protection "spell" is placed on them by a priest, but many believe that her father never actually granted the protection spell on her but on her brother, King Ilaem Nefest Patton I, instead opting to skip Queen Cawiloan Heka Patton entirely, publicly showing his lack of favor towards her. In truth Queen Cawiloan Heka Patton and King Benjaïen Nefest Patton had a rocky father daughter relationship because King Benjaïen Nefest Patton openly detested how much like her mother Queen Vala Uinara Patton, Cawiloan looked. But Queen Cawiloan lived a long life, she never knew the feeling of suffering outside of her strained relationship with her father and was kind and gentle since birth. Her mother Queen Vala nearly died giving birth to her, and it was almost like Cawiloan knew that, and understood the suffering of her mother to a great extent. Since she was little Cawiloan never cried, she only smiled supposedly desperately trying to ease her mother's pain and sadness. Among Queen Vala's two children, Cawiloan was the closest to her, she was even there when her mother died and held onto her hands as she passed. Instead of crying like her brother she sang to both of them and comforted both herself and her brother. Queen Cawiloan hated her father more than anything after her mother's death and openly expressed her disapproval of his lifestyle, blaming his lifestyle and personality for contributing to her mother's suffering. She would constantly avoid her father's touch, in rare moments of interaction between the two and would often say that he was the reason for her mother's death. When her father did die Cawiloan wore white and went to her mother's grave instead of attending his passing on ceremony. After the ceremony she had all her father's lovers expelled from court, and forbade them or anyone else for that matter from tending to her father's grave. By all accounts though, Queen Cawiloan was a good queen and mother, she was a kind of virtuous lady who cared for her country with all her heart outside of her actions regarding her father and his lovers.

POWER & POSITION

Highest Title Held: Queen of Aicruae (Consort to King Ilaem Nefest Patton I), Queen Dowager/Former Queen of Aicruae.

Political Faction: Cawiloan worked to maintain the stability of House Patton and supported conventional political arrangements, including advocating for sibling marriage to secure succession. Key Allies: Queen Vala Uinara Patton (her mother, to whom she was devoted), King Ilaem Nefest Patton I (her brother/husband), the court faction that supported Princess Asayera, and later Queen Isalian Liazen (whom she raised as a ward despite initially opposing Isalian's marriage to her son). Key Enemies: King Benjaïen Nefest Patton (her father, whom she hated "more than anything"), Araner and Jelkita (her father's lovers whom she expelled from court after his death), and by extension anyone who reminded her of her father's infidelities and cruelty toward her mother.

LEGACY

Immediate Impact: Cawiloan's actions at her father's funeral sent a powerful message throughout Aicruae: that King Benjaen's treatment of Queen Vala was recognized as criminal by his own daughter, and that filial piety did not require overlooking murder. By expelling her father's lovers and forbidding the maintenance of his grave, she ensured that his legacy would be forever tainted. As Queen Dowager, her decision to take in the orphaned Liazen sisters shaped the future of the dynasty, though she opposed the match, her ward Isalian would go on to marry her son and create the second golden age. Long-Term Impact: Her son King Haliour II's capacity for deep, genuine love (so unusual among Patton kings) developed because he had a mother who modeled kindness and emotional honesty rather than the cold political calculation that had characterized earlier queens. The fact that Haliour II dedicated his life to his wife and children, building libraries and writing poems for them, is because he learned from Cawiloan what love could look like. The "second golden age of House Patton since the country's founding" can be traced directly to her influence.

Known For: Queen Isalian Liazen is known for being the wealthy heiress of Liazen, and the last surviving member of the main branch of the Liazen. She is also known for being the wife of King Haliour Layern Patton II. The Mother of Princess Naila Deyua Patton and Prince Teravian Geraser Patton who would go on to become Queen Naila Deyua Patton and King Consort Teravian Geraser Patton.

Major Accomplishments: The commission of thirty-seven plus pieces of jewelry that would later be added to the royal collection and treasury. Queen Isalian was the only woman in all of Aicruae's history to receive the title of Mother Superior of Aicruae. Created the first Perfumes used in Aicruae. Introduced new styles of clothing and jewelry to the court. Brought new recipes to Aicruaean culture. Added trees and wildlife around the castle and capital city to combat health issues (people passing out). Designed the great throne room of Aicruae. Created the design and layout for the royal meeting space. Helped construct the royal training grounds. Introduced the concept of balconies to Aicruae architecture. Created the idea of messenger birds as a communication system. She also expanded the royal treasury with several notable jewelery collections. The Second Golden Age: Her union with King Haliour II "became one of the most successful to ever exist and they created the second golden age of House Patton, the first one since the country's founding." Preserving House Liazen: By agreeing to keep the name Liazen rather than taking Patton, she ensured her sister would not be "the only remaining Liazen." This sacrifice preserved the Liazen name within the royal lineage. Major Failures: She wasn't initially approved by the court or Queen Cawiloan Heka Patton for marriage, and wasn't allowed to take the Patton name, having to remain "Liazen" due to the crown's bumpy history with the Liazen territory. Her grandson King Viake Recreadion Patton became "the worst king in all of Aicruae's history" and perpetrated the Massacre of Light (90,000 deaths), though Isalian died before witnessing these horrors.

How History Remembers Them: Queen Isalian Liazen had heterochromia, specifically she had a dark green right eye and a dark blue left eye. But in most of her portraits she either has blue or green eyes, as this is commonly known to have been a great insecurity of hers. Queen Isalian really liked flowers and she had commissioned over thirty-seven pieces of flowery jewelry to be made from the gems provided in her enormous dowry. Isalian Liazen was born to Lady Naern Mena and "Count" Jinegi Liazen, she was apart of the royal family of Aicruae through her mother's side because her mother was the daughter of Princess Aliedea Cawiloan Patton, who was one of the daughters of King Haliour Layern Patton I.

Her mother and father alongside most of her family members were killed in a territorial dispute over the small piece of flourishing land known as Liazen within Aicruae, which had not fully bowed to the Aicruae Royal Family/House Patton and had for a period of roughly 50 years acted as their own "country" from roughly 8,720BR to 8,663BR. The territorial dispute occurred in 8,662BR, and lasted just a few months. A year before Liazen had officially fell, Queen Isalian Liazen's father formerly his Majesty Jinegi Liazen pleaded with the Aicruae Royal Family/House Patton to grant him the title of Count within Aicruae in exchange for access to the Liazen treasury and King Ilaem Nefest Patton I of Aicruae agreed. The dispute happened because Jinegi didn't have full support within Liazen to make such a deal with Aicruae, leading to internal conflict, because Liazen was extremely prosperous some members with the territory just couldn't fathom bowing to Aicruae, and offering up their wealth and status which lead to Jinegi's authority to be questioned. When the territorial dispute happened Isalian Liazen was forced to flee at eight years of age alongside her sister Agari Liazen who was only one year of age. Unfortunately Agari Liazen could not take the sudden events and passed away from illness before the age of two.

Once the territorial dispute was settled Liazen had been absorbed into Aicruae officially later on in 8,662 BR and Queen Isalian Liazen was eventually taken in as the ward of the Queen Cawiloan Heka Patton and she was raised alongside the queen's daughter. When she arrived in the capital Isalian was one of the wealthiest noble ladies to ever exist at the time, having a dowry that was twice the royal treasury because of her father's notable businesses and the success of the Liazen territory before it was absorbed into Aicruae. Queen Isalian Liazen was said to have been very beautiful ever since she was little, which grabbed the attention of King Haliour Layern Patton II of Aicruae. When Queen Isalian Liazen first met King Haliour Layern Patton II, she despised him and avoided him as much as possible. Often pretending to be sick as an excuse to decline his invitations, but as the years went on she began to fall for Haliour's charming personality and unique sense of humor.

She never quite loved him and publicly acknowledged his feelings until 8,658 BR, when King Haliour competed in a tournament, King Haliour was fourteen years old and Queen Isalian was twelve. When King Haliour won the tournament he presented her with a crown made out of roses publicly in front of everyone, Queen Isalian was in awe of him at that moment and decided to acknowledge him. They married two years after the tournament in 8,656 BR, after going through countless fights with one another that almost prevented them from marrying. Queen Isalian Liazen originally didn't get the approval of the court or Queen Cawiloan Heka Patton and so when they got married she wasn't allowed to take on the name Patton but was forced to keep the name Liazen, because of the crown's bumpy history with the Liazen territory before it was absorbed. Queen Isalian Liazen agreed to this condition because she was really the only Liazen left from the main royal family of Liazen, and marrying the King of Aicruae would ensure her position for some time as well as the legacy of the Liazen continuing to stay noble.

Queen Isalian Liazen married King Haliour Layern Patton II in a grand ceremony that all of Aicruae was permitted to attend funded by her own dowry.

After her wedding Queen Isalian quickly became the most talked about respected lady of the country she introduced and helped create the concept of perfume specifically rose scented perfume, new styles of clothing, jewelry, recipes and numerous architectural feats including adding trees and wildlife around the castle and in the capital city to combat the numerous cases of people passing out, creating the design and layout of the great throne room of Aicruae, as well as the design and layout for the royal meeting space, helping construct the royal training grounds, and creating the idea of messenger birds, as well as the idea of balcony's. She also brought about new additions to the royal treasury and jewelry collection the most notable ones being; The Liazen Royal set, Haliour's Favorite collection, The Snake Eye collection, The Bregaria collection that was made up of 37 plus pieces, The Jewels of Dagalrea and The Ruins of Inalia collection. Her and King Haliour Layern Patton II's love story inspired countless songs and other fantastical tales, and their children went on to be equally as great rulers as their parents. In a meeting with foreign reps, Queen Naila Deyua Patton recounted her lessons taught to her by her mother Queen Isalian Liazen, it was during this meeting were Naila Deyua Patton famously quoted her mother saying ""No matter how sad the fact is, Queens aren't allowed to be victims. We can be everything else though, Daughters, Wives, and Mothers. My daughter you are going to be queen one day and you must never allow yourself to be anything but what you are. My Daughter. Promise me that." When some foreign reps grew frustrated that she was the acting ruler of Aicruae and not her husband King Consort Teravian Geraser Patton who was a man.

POWER & POSITION

Highest Title Held: Queen of Aicruae (Consort), "Mother Superior" (the only woman in Aicruae's history to receive this title)

Political Faction: Initially an outsider opposed by the court establishment, Isalian eventually became the center of Aicruae society and culture.

Key Allies: King Haliour Layern Patton II (her husband, who was "absolutely in love with her" and "obsessed" with her happiness), Queen Cawiloan Heka Patton (her guardian, despite initially opposing the marriage), Princess Naila Deyua Patton and Prince Teravian Geraser Patton (her devoted children). Key Enemies:Initially, the council, the court, and Queen Cawiloan Heka Patton all opposed her marriage to Haliour II. They “really loved” Princess Asayera Atani Patton and wanted her to marry Haliour instead. The establishment’s opposition was strong enough to deny Isalian the Patton name. But, these enemies were largely won over after the marriage proved successful.

Immediate Impact:Isalian’s marriage to Haliour II transformed both the king and the kingdom. Haliour, who had been “a rebellious prince who enjoyed nothing more than hunting and partying, engaging in mundane trivial activities and acting without a real purpose in life,” became a devoted husband and effective ruler. He “dedicated everything in his life to his wife and children from poems to flowers, and libraries”, his obsession with making her happy drove him to invent the first known contraceptives when she said she only wanted two children. Together they created cultural institutions and culinary traditions that persisted for centuries.

Long-Term Impact:Isalian’s dowry alone transformed the royal treasury, 17 estates, 42 boxes of silk and furs, 38 full boxes of jewels, and enough additional wealth that her dowry was “twice the royal treasury.” Her cultural innovations (perfume, fashion, food, architecture) became foundational elements of Aicruaeen civilization. Her quote about queenship, “No matter how sad the fact is, Queens aren’t allowed to be victims. We can be everything else though, Daughters, Wives, and Mothers”became wisdom passed down through generations. The Liazen bloodline she preserved continued through her descendants, including the “last heiress of the Liazen family,” Princess Karinoa Nalia Patton.

How Later Generations View Them:Later generations view Isalian as the gold standard for queenship, proof that a queen could be powerful, innovative, and genuinely loved.

Monuments/Memorials:Her birthday was established as a royal holiday by her son Prince Teravian The statue “Mother, Father, Wife and Their Humble Servant” (publicly called “the Liazen Royals”) stands in the royal garden, a giant statue depicting Teravian, his wife (Queen Naila Deyua Patton), and their parents (Isalian and Haliour II)Twelve songs were commissioned about her and Haliour II’s love story

Countless other songs and “fantastical tales” inspired by their romance. The flowery jewelry she created from her dowry gems became treasured heirlooms.

Descendant Characters:Through her daughter Princess Naila Deyua Patton and son Prince Teravian Geraser Patton (who married each other), Isalian is the ancestor of:King Viake Recreadion Patton (the “Skunk King”), Princess Karinoa Nalia Patton (the last Liazen heiress), King Sayero Walica Patton (named after Queen Walica), King Benjamin Lawrence Patton I, And eventually Emperor Solis Elias Patton.

Every subsequent Patton ruler carries her blood, and the Liazen name she preserved continued through her lineage.

Events Referenced in Books:Isalian’s story provides the template for what a successful royal marriage can look like.The foods she and Haliour II created are still eaten in Solis’s era.

How Characters View Them: Characters in the series view Isalian with admiration and longing. Her love story represents the best-case scenario in a world where most royal marriages are political arrangements or outright traps. Her heterochromia, her immense wealth, her beauty, her cultural innovations, and her devoted husband make her almost a fairy-tale figure.

Where This Figure Appears in Canon:

Contradictory Accounts (if any):Her portraits consistently depict her with either blue or green eyes, never her actual heterochromia (one dark green, one dark blue). The question of whether she ever truly loved Haliour or simply accepted an inevitable marriage is somewhat ambiguous, she “never quite loved him until 8, 658BR” when he presented her with the rose crown, but the depth and nature of that love is not known. She may have loved him as deeply as he loved her, or she may have simply grown to appreciate his devotion.

NOTES

The total value of Queen Isalian Liazen's dowry is estimated at 600,000 Rern, distributed across eight major categories of wealth. The seventeen estates granted by deed represent the single largest category at 120,000 Rern, accounting for twenty percent of the total value. These properties, scattered across multiple territories, provided the queen with landed income independent of the royal purse and ensured her financial security regardless of political circumstance. Textiles and furs constitute the most valuable category of moveable goods at 150,000 Rern, or twenty-five percent of the dowry's worth. This was due to Liazen's primary trade in luxury fabrics, the forty-two crates of silk, brocade, velvet, and precious furs were from decades of careful acquisition through these international trading networks.

The jewelry and gemstone collection, contained within thirty-eight crates, is valued at 120,000 Rern and comprises twenty percent of the total. This category comes from Liazen's mining interests and includes both finished pieces of extraordinary craftsmanship and loose stones reserved for future settings.

Loose money amounts to 100,000 Rern, representing roughly sixteen and two-thirds percent of the dowry. This liquid wealth ensured the queen could meet immediate expenses and exercise financial independence from the moment of her marriage. Silver and metalwork, including ceremonial plate, dining service, and household silver, is valued at 40,000 Rern, or just under seven percent. Household furnishings, the great beds, carved furniture, tapestries, and carpets, account for 30,000 Rern at five percent. Spices, dyes, and aromatics together represent 20,000 Rern at three and one-third percent, while all remaining goods including books, musical instruments, religious items, ceramics, glassware, botanical specimens, and toiletries comprise the final 20,000 Rern.

SONG ONE: "The Ashes of Liazen"

Commissioned by: Princess Naila Deyua Patton and Prince Teravian Geraser Patton, 8,588 BR (one year after their father's death, two years before their mother's)

About: The massacre of House Liazen and eight-year-old Isalian's arrival at the capital with her three-year-old sister, carrying grief and a fortune twice the royal treasury. The song honors her origins before she became queen.

When Performed: Sung at memorial services for House Liazen, and traditionally performed on the anniversary of the massacre. Also sung at Isalian's funeral and has since become a standard mourning song for noble houses that have suffered similar losses.

Mood: Mournful, dignified, restrained grief that refuses to break

BPM: 58 , funeral pace, slow enough for a procession

Instrumentation: The song opens with a single velacor playing a low, sustained drone that continues beneath the first verse. A frame drum enters softly on the second verse, striking once per line rather than keeping steady rhythm, like a heartbeat slowing. A wooden flute joins only for the final verse, playing a simple descending melody between lines. No instruments play during the final repetition of the last two lines, which are sung unaccompanied. The velacor returns for one final sustained note after the voice falls silent.

Lyrics:

Verse 1:

The house stood tall at morning light,
By evening it was ash.
They came with steel, they came with fire,
And left two girls alone.

Verse 2:

She carried her sister through the dark,
No mother's hand to hold.
Eight summers old with winter eyes,
And gold enough to drown.

Verse 3:

The capital opened its gates to her,
A ward without a home.
They called her rich, they called her fair,
But she was only small.

Verse 4:

Remember the name she would not lose,
Remember what was taken.
Before the crown, before the king,
She was a Liazen.

Final lines (repeated, unaccompanied):

Before the crown, before the king,

She was a Liazen.

Full Name: Karinoa Nalia Patton, daughter of King Viake Recreasion Patton and Queen Mari Patton/Liazen

House/Family: House Patton (Maiden Family/Pre-Marriage), Liazen (through her mother Queen Mari) Her mother came from a distant branch of the Liazen family, not the main royal line, but a side branch of the royal family. Mari Liazen used the Liazen name to benefit from Queen Isalian Liazen's popularity, but if the Liazen territory still existed, Queen Mari would not have been allowed to use the name, as she had no direct connection to the main royal family branch.

Their hair texture is usually straight or wavy and the colors range anywhere from blonde to brown to black to red. With an angular or softly squared jawline, thinner lips that can sometimes be moderately full, cheekbones range from high to mid-set.)

Appearance: Karinoa Nalia Patton was a young woman who had a soft, heart-shaped face with a slightly rounded chin. Her hair is a warm ash-blonde with hints of strawberry, falling in loose waves past her shoulders. Her eyes were large and round, a grayish blue-green with prominent lashes. The nose was small and slightly upturned with a soft tip. Her skin is fair with peachy-pink undertones, particularly flushed across the cheeks and nose. She had full, pillowy lips with a pronounced Cupid's bow. Her features were delicate and youthful. She was 5'4"', with average build.

Nation: Aicruae

HISTORICAL SIGNIFICANCE

Known For: Princess Karinoa Nalia Patton, is known for being the last heiress of the Liazen family and the last woman to have traceable heritage of both House Liazen and House Patton. Renouncing her claim to the throne to join the Cidet.

Major Accomplishments: Dedicated her life in service of the common people through the Cidet. Major Failures: She deliberately ended the Liazen line through herself, and was the last traceable heiress/female member of the Liazen bloodline.

How History Remembers Them: Princess Karinoa Nalia Patton was the last heiress of the Liazen family. She is the last woman to have a traceable heritage of both House Liazen and House Patton. After witnessing the actions of her parents (she wasn't alive for the massacre of light, but her parents were tyrants for as long as she could remember) she chose to leave the royal family at the age of 18. Denouncing her right to claim the throne she chose to give her life to the Cidet instead, swearing never to have children out of fear of them inheriting what she referred to as "Demon Blood" or more painly the fear that her children might turn out just as insane as her parents. From afar she watched as her brother continued the same lifestyle as their father and mother and she greatly disapproved of their actions overall up until her death. She spent her life in service of the common people and while she wasn't close with her brother she was still close with her brother's wife who was her childhood friend. She lived out her days in peace, not knowing any suffering while her brother died in agony after falling ill with Sela Meysei later on and her parents died in a suspicious fire. Though she was the first of her direct family to die, she was by far the most peaceful when it came to how she passed.

POWER & POSITION

Highest Title Held: Princess of Aicruae (renounced)

Political Faction: Karinoa deliberately removed herself from all political factions. By joining the Cidet, she took vows that severed her national allegiances and royal ties. Her decision to renounce her claim to the throne was a conscious rejection of House Patton's politics entirely. If anything, she aligned with the Danepelie (the council of senior priests governing the Cidet) and the religious establishment that maintained sacred neutrality between all nations.

Key Allies: Queen Cecea Sanitte Patton

Key Enemies: While Karinoa avoided making personal enemies, her very existence was a silent rebuke to her parents King Viake Recreadion Patton and Queen Mari Patton. Her public renunciation of the throne and her phrase "Demon Blood" to describe the family line was a damning statement about their character. She also disapproved of her brother King Sayero Walica Patton's continuation of their parents' tyrannical lifestyle, creating estrangement between them. But, she maintained enough distance from court that she never became a direct political threat or target.

Immediate Impact: Karinoa's departure from the royal family at eighteen sent a powerful message throughout Aicruae: that the crown princess herself found her parents' behavior so monstrous she would rather live as a celibate servant of the gods than risk passing on what she called "Demon Blood." Her renunciation was one of the few acts of open resistance against King Viake's regime that went unpunished, likely because imprisoning or executing a princess who had devoted herself to religious service would have caused a scandal with the Cidet and undermined whatever remained of House Patton's legitimacy. Her choice to serve the common people directly contrasted with her parents' abuse of those same people.

Long-Term Impact: Karinoa deliberately ended the traceable female Liazen line through herself, a conscious choice that would have echoed through history. The Liazen name, which Queen Isalian had sacrificed so much to preserve, ended its legitimate claim with Karinoa's decision not to bear children. Her peaceful death in 8,570BR, before her parents died in a suspicious fire (8,552BR) and before the Massacre of Light (8,558 BR), meant she never witnessed the worst of her father's atrocities. In a grim irony, her fear of "Demon Blood" was vindicated by events she never lived to see: her father would go on to murder 90,000 followers of the Order of the Pure Ones for no reason.

How Later Generations View Them:

Monuments/Memorials:As a member of the Cidet who renounced her royal titles, Karinoa received no official monuments from House Patton. The Cidet itself may have commemorated her service. Given her lifetime of dedication to serving the common people, she has been remembered in prayers, in the names of charitable works, and in the oral traditions of the communities she served. Her childhood friend Queen Cecea Sanitte Patton privately honored her memory, because publicly acknowledging the woman who called the Patton bloodline "Demon Blood" would have been politically awkward.

Descendant Characters:None. Karinoa deliberately chose to have no children, swearing celibacy as part of her vows to the Cidet. The Liazen bloodline, as traced through women, ended with her. While her brother King Sayero Walica Patton continued the Patton line (eventually leading to Emperor Solis Elias Patton), Karinoa's branch terminated by design. This makes her a significant figure, as the "last woman to have traceable heritage of both House Liazen and House Patton."

Era: [Warriors' Age, Golden Millennia, etc.]

IDENTITY

Full Name: Before marrying King Ilaem Nefest Patton II, Rayaliem was Rayaliem Des Patton, the daughter of Isaka Des Patton a noblewoman who was born during the Siege of High Water. House/Family: House Patton (Through Marriage). Her maiden family was a branch descended from King Benjamin Lawrence Patton I and Princess Toavaliae Javivata Patton through Queen Tani Evalia Patton, making her distantly related to her husband's line.

Appearance: Queen Rayaliem was a woman with a more angular face shape, somewhere between oval and heart-shaped. Her platinum blonde hair fell straight and sleek. Her eyes were striking pale blue, large and slightly wide-set, with a soft, almost doll-like quality. Brows were darker than her hair, well-defined with a gentle arch. Her nose was straight and refined. Her skin was porcelain-fair with a cool pink undertone and pronounced rosy cheeks. Her lips were full and were soft pink. She was 5'3" with a slender build.

Nation: Aicruae

HISTORICAL SIGNIFICANCE

Known For: Queen Rayaliem Tani Patton is known for being the wife of King Ilaem Nefest Patton II and the mother of King Vaeric Nefest Patton. She is also known for her tragic life, her severe mental health struggles inherited through generations of trauma originating from the Siege of High Water, and for taking her own life at age 32 .

Major Accomplishments: Despite her withdrawn nature and severe mental health struggles, Rayaliem fulfilled her duty to the crown by producing an heir, Prince Vaeric Nefest Patton, who would go on to become king. She survived long enough to give birth and ensure the continuation of the Patton line during what was a particularly turbulent period for House Patton.

Major Failures: Rayaliem was unable to overcome the generational trauma she inherited. She struggled to form relationships with anyone, including her six siblings, her husband, and ultimately her son, whom she left motherless at age three. Her isolation prevented her from participating in court life or fulfilling the public duties expected of a queen. She was unable to find help or healing in a society that did not understand mental illness, and she ended her life before her son was old enough to know her. How History Remembers Them: Queen Rayaliem Tani Patton was born approximately 60 years after the Siege of High Water, but the horror of that event reached her nonetheless. Her grandmother, Sanbeca Des Patton, gave birth to Rayaliem's mother during the siege itself, in circumstances so traumatic that the child was born already bearing the marks of that terror.

Rayaliem's mother suffered from severe PTSD throughout her life, and this condition passed to Rayaliem, who was said to have "inherited" it. From her earliest years, Rayaliem was extremely shy and withdrawn. Unlike the typical childhood shyness that fades with time, hers only deepened. She never interacted with her six siblings and found comfort only in solitude, preferring to remain locked in her room away from the world. The court found her strange and pitied her, but no one knew how to help her. Her marriage to King Ilaem Nefest Patton II was arranged for political purposes, and Rayaliem had little say in the matter. The wedding occurred when she was approximately 27 years old (around 7,375 BR). Three years into the marriage, she gave birth to Prince Vaeric Nefest Patton in 7,373 BR. But the demands of motherhood and queenship only worsened her condition. Five years after her wedding and three years after giving birth, Queen Rayaliem Tani Patton took her own life in 7,370 BR. She was 32 years old. Her death left her three-year-old son Vaeric without a mother and cast a shadow over the early years of his life. King Ilaem II outlived but never remarried, whether out of grief, duty, or political calculation remains unclear.

POWER & POSITION

Highest Title Held: Queen of Aicruae (Consort to King Ilaem Nefest Patton II)

Political Faction:Rayaliem had no political faction. Her severe withdrawal from public life meant she played no role in court politics, alliances, or factions. She was a queen in title only, unable to participate in the political maneuvering that characterized Aicruae court life. If anything, her absence created a power vacuum that others filled.

Key Allies:Her husband King Ilaem Nefest Patton II provided for her and seems to have accommodated her need for isolation rather than forcing her into public duties. Her son Prince Vaeric Nefest Patton, though only three when she died, was the person she was closest to in her final years. Key Enemies:Rayaliem made no enemies because she had no presence at court to offend anyone. Her true enemy was the generational trauma she inherited, passed down from her grandmother's experience during the Siege of High Water through her mother to herself. The society around her, which had no understanding of or treatment for mental illness, failed her as well.

Immediate Impact:Rayaliem's suicide left her young son Vaeric without a mother at age three. King Ilaem II was forced to raise the heir alone (or more realistically with the help of court nurses and tutors), which may have influenced Vaeric's development. The tragedy of her death was kept quiet to avoid scandal, though whispers circulated. Her death also meant King Ilaem II had no queen to perform the ceremonial and diplomatic duties expected of a royal consort for the remaining years of his reign.

Long-Term Impact:Her son Vaeric grew up without a mother's presence, raised knowing only that she had been "unwell" and had died young. Whether this absence shaped his later marriage to the foreign princess Caelindra Hessa (a woman described as "cold and distant" and "deeply homesick and misunderstood") is worth considering, he sought and accepted emotional distance because it was familiar.

Descendant Characters:Through her son King Vaeric Nefest Patton, Rayaliem is an ancestor of the entire subsequent Patton line: King Jesuin Walica Patton, King Darien Lacern Patton, King Benjamin Lawrence Patton II, and ultimately Emperor Solis Elias Patton (the protagonist of A Tale of A Thousand Songs). Every Patton after her carries her blood.

Events Referenced in Books:The Siege of High Water, which occurred approximately 60 years before Rayaliem's birth, is the root cause of her suffering. The generational trauma from this event shaped three generations of her family.

How Characters View Them: Characters in the series know little about Rayaliem beyond that she was "fragile" or "unwell."

Abstract

- Full Name:Before founding his dynasty, Hailour had no surname. He was a bastard, born of a man who had sworn to devote his life to the gods of new and old, and a commoner woman. His father never acknowledged his origins, so Hailour was raised as a nameless servant. The name "Patton" (meaning "Victorious" or "Winner") was chosen by Hailour himself when he founded his royal house. House/Family:House Patton (Founded by him)
Ethnicity:Aicruae-Varie (People with typically light to fair skin tones, sometimes with pink or cool undertones. Their noses are often narrow or straight-bridged; the tip may be pointed or softly rounded. Their eyes are usually deep-set with defined eyelid creases in colors like blue, green, grey, hazel, or light brown. Their hair texture is usually straight or wavy and the colors range anywhere from blonde to brown to black to red. With an angular or softly squared jawline, thinner lips that can sometimes be moderately full, cheekbones range from high to mid-set.) Appearance:King Haliour Layern Patton I was a striking figure with very pale, platinum-white hair worn in loose, slightly textured waves. His face was oblong with strong bone structure, high cheekbones, and a square jawline that looked slightly androgynous. Eyes were pale blue-gray under heavy, straight brows. The nose is broader with a prominent bridge.Skin was extremely pale with warm pink undertones. Lips were medium-full, neutral. 6'5" with a lean and angular build. Nation:(Founded by him)

HISTORICAL SIGNIFICANCE

Known For:King Hailour Layern Patton I is known for being the first king and founder of Aicruae, the founder of House Patton, and the man who received a divine vision from the god Razar that determined his destiny. He is also known for uniting the warring clans of proto-Aicruae through a combination of military conquest and strategic alliance, for creating the House Patton crest based on his vision of two panthers fighting on a cliff, and for building the capital city of Lajazer atop a mountain cliff guided by prophetic dreams. He destroyed all records of life in Aicruae before his dynasty, deliberately erasing the history that preceded him.

Major Accomplishments:Founded the Kingdom of Aicruae at age 30, uniting the warring clans through military conquest and strategic marriages. Built the capital city of Lajazer atop a sheer mountain cliff, a virtually impregnable location chosen based on his prophetic dream. Created strong legislation that established House Patton's authority and made it clear his family was not to be challenged.

Established an unbroken Patton dynasty that would last for nearly two millennia. Founded House Arvento in 8,746 BR by granting his close friend and advisor Lenkitta Arvento lands and noble status, creating the second-oldest noble house in Aicruae and an enduring alliance between the two houses. Received the Medal of Soalm (Gold: The Medal of Sun) posthumously for his foundational role in Aicruae's history.

Major Failures:His marriage to Queen Walica Kevena Patton was cold and neglectful. He openly doted on Lenkitta Arvento while his wife watched from afar, and the court held little respect for Walica partly because of his treatment of her. He lost his youngest daughter Princess Narseai Bekan Patton in infancy (8, 748BR — 8, 747BR). By destroying all records of life in Aicruae before his dynasty, he erased the history and heritage of countless people, an act of cultural destruction that ensured his narrative would be the only one that survived. He died at only 53, reportedly from the stress and exhaustion of creating a kingdom and dynasty, he burned himself out building his legacy and did not live to see his grandchildren. His son Benjaien inherited at 18 and "lived in his father's shadow his whole entire life and never quite lived up to the legacy of his father."

How History Remembers Them:The first king of Aicruae was a bastard, born of a man who had sworn to devote his life to the gods of new and old, and a commoner woman. When Hailour was born, his mother abandoned him, leaving him at his father's door. His father pretended not to know his origins, and Hailour was raised as a simple servant until his father's death when Hailour reached twelve years of age. His father's death left poor young Hailour without a home for two years.

At age fourteen he was taken in by a national mercenary group leader and he trained with them until he was twenty-two years of age. At twenty-two, King Hailour I first saw the god Razar. Razar showed King Hailour a dream of his fate, a vision where he died as a poor man, forgotten and insignificant. King Hailour did not like this dream and asked the god what he should do to change it. Razar told him to become king. The god then showed him one last vision: two panthers fighting on a cliff, surrounded by fire and bleeding gold. After the fight was finished, the sun took over the sky and everything looked like it was covered in gold.

This vision became the symbol of House Patton. King Hailour I killed the man who had taken him in and took charge of the mercenary group. Together, he and the members of the group worked to unite the country under his control. This was not without troubles, to become King, Hailour had to face Dures, a skilled warrior and champion and the most powerful warlord in what would become Aicruae. That was a battle that could have gone either way. But Dures was willing to accept Hailour as his king, so long as Hailour married Dures's only daughter and heir, Walica. King Hailour agreed, and their marriage created the Royal Family of Aicruae. He founded the Kingdom of Aicruae at the age of thirty. King Hailour was a fierce ruler who created strong legislation and made it very clear that his family was not someone to be challenged. During the age of war and bloodshed, he was one of the few true winners of the Warrior's age. Unfortunately, not much is known about the country's founding unlike with some of the other countries, because King Hailour Layern Patton I destroyed all records of life in Aicruae before him and his dynasty. Whatever history existed before the Pattons was deliberately erased. King Hailour lived to the age of fifty-three. It is said that he died from the stress and exhaustion of creating a kingdom and dynasty. He was succeeded by his heir Benjaïen Nefest Patton.

POWER & POSITION

Highest Title Held: King of Aicruae (First)

Political Faction: As the founder of House Patton and the monarchy itself, Hailour established the political system that would govern Aicruae for millennia. House Patton belongs to the Divine Fraction, those who believe in the divine right of the monarchy and nobility class system.

Key Allies: Lenkitta Arvento (his closest friend and advisor, whom he openly favored over his own wife; he granted her lands and noble status, founding House Arvento as the second-oldest noble house in Aicruae), Dures (the most powerful warlord in proto-Aicruae, who surrendered to Hailour and gave his daughter Walica as a bride in exchange for peace), Queen Walica Kevena Patton (his wife, who despite his neglect bore him three children and later proved herself as regent after his death), and the mercenary group he led after killing their former leader. Key Enemies: The mercenary leader who took him in at age fourteen (whom Hailour killed to take control of the group), rival warlords during the Warriors' Age who refused to submit to his rule, and initially Dures (though this enmity was resolved through the marriage alliance). After his death, many factions emerged who wanted House Patton to fail so they could claim the throne for themselves.

Immediate Impact: Hailour's unification of the warring clans ended the chaos of the Warriors' Age in Aicruae and established a stable monarchy. His alliance with Lenkitta Arvento and the founding of House Arvento ensured internal stability through a loyal noble house. His construction of Lajazer atop a mountain cliff created a virtually impregnable capital that symbolized Patton authority for generations. His destruction of all pre-Patton records ensured that his narrative became the only history Aicruae would remember.

Long-Term Impact: Every subsequent ruler of Aicruae traces their lineage to Hailour. The Patton dynasty he founded would last nearly two millennia, surviving internal conflicts, plagues, and wars. The alliance he forged with House Arvento through Lenkitta remained strong throughout Aicruae's history, with House Arvento serving as trusted advisors to the crown. His vision of the two panthers became not just the House Patton crest, but a symbol of Aicruae itself. The religious connection he established between House Patton and the god Razar made Aicruae "the land under the sun," with the royal family seen as divinely chosen. His descendants include the great love story of King Hailour II and Queen Isalian, the tragic reign of King Viake (the worst king in Aicruae history), and ultimately Emperor Solis Elias Patton.

How Later Generations View Them: Hailour is viewed with reverence as the founding father who created Aicruae from chaos. He is remembered as fierce, visionary, and divinely blessed, the bastard servant who spoke with gods and became a king. His ruthlessness (killing his mercenary mentor, destroying pre-Patton history) is often overlooked or justified as necessary for nation-building. His neglect of Queen Walica is acknowledged but rarely condemned; later generations tend to focus on his political and military achievements rather than his personal failings. His legacy looms so large that his son Benjaïen “lived in his father’s shadow his whole entire life and never quite lived up to the legacy of his father.”

Monuments/Memorials:The capital city of Lajazer itself stands as his greatest monument,built atop a mountain cliff based on his prophetic dream. House Patton’s crest (two panthers fighting on a cliff, surrounded by fire and bleeding gold, with the sun taking over the sky) immortalizes his divine vision from Razar. He received the Medal of Soalm (Gold: The Medal of Sun) posthumously. A later king, King Sayero Walica Patton (8, 615 BR - 8,540 BR), was named partly in tribute to Queen Walica, but the Patton name itself commemorates Hailour with every generation. The absence of pre-Patton historical records is itself a monument to his thoroughness, he ensured he would be remembered as the beginning.

Descendant Characters:Every member of House Patton after him, including Emperor Solis Elias Patton (the protagonist of A Tale of A Thousand Songs), descends from Hailour. His son King Benjaïen Nefest Patton continued the direct royal line. Through approximately fifteen to sixteen generations, his bloodline leads to Solis.

Events Referenced in Books:The founding of Aicruae and House Patton, the vision of the two panthers, the destruction of pre-Patton records, and the alliance with House Arvento are all foundational events that shaped the world Solis inherits.

How Characters View Them:Characters in the series view Hailour as a legendary, almost mythical figure, the bastard who became king through divine intervention.

Contradictory Accounts (if any):The question of whether Dures surrendered willingly or was defeated in battle is somewhat ambiguous. It’s unclear whether there was an actual battle where Dures was killed, or whether Dures surrendered before such a battle occurred and the “killing” refers to Dures’s death at some later point.

NOTES

Hailour’s relationship with the god Razar establishes the divine mandate for House Patton’s rule. Razar is the God of the Sun and Aicruae’s preeminent deity, his gold sun symbol adorns the royal banner. Hailour’s encounter with Razar at age twenty-two transformed him from a mercenary seeking fortune into a man with divine purpose. The name “Hailour” was given to his great-grandson, King Hailour Layern Patton II, who became one of the most beloved kings in Aicruae history through his legendary love story with Queen Isalian Liazen.

He had a severe, intense, almost defiant look to him. He was 5'7" with an athletic build.

Nation:Aicruae

HISTORICAL SIGNIFICANCE

Known For:King Benjaïen Nefest Patton is known for being the second king of Aicruae and the son of the legendary founder King Haliour Layern Patton I. He is also known for his tumultuous relationships with his mother Queen Walica Kevena Patton and his wife Queen Vala Uinara Patton, both of whom he openly despised. He is the father of King Ilaem Nefest Patton I and Queen Cawiloan Heka Patton. Perhaps most notably, he is remembered for his dramatic transformation later in life, when he evolved from an immature, pleasure-seeking prince into a capable ruler who matched his father's legacy in infrastructure and governance.

Major Accomplishments:After the deaths of his mother and wife, King Benjaïen underwent a remarkable transformation under the guidance of his lovers-turned-advisors Araner and Jelkita. He constructed thousands of bridges and dams throughout Aicruae, significantly improving trade and travel. He successfully mediated several internal disputes between noble factions, maintaining the stability his father had established. By the end of his reign, he had earned the love of the common people and achieved feats that matched his father's legacy. While he was never a good son or husband, he was reportedly a good father to his many bastard children.

Major Failures:Benjaïen inherited the throne at 18 but was effectively governed by his mother as regent until he was 24, a humiliation he never forgave. He lived in his father's shadow his entire life and, by most accounts, never truly escaped it. He was very immature and childish, with no mind or heart for politics, only enjoying the company of men and women. He openly hated his mother and wife, reportedly saying he wished they both would die. He fathered many bastards while neglecting his legitimate family. He most likely poisoned his wife Queen Vala. He supposedly never granted the traditional protection spell on his daughter Cawiloan at her birth, publicly showing his lack of favor toward her, and openly detested how much she resembled her mother. His relationship with his legitimate children was deeply estranged, and his daughter Cawiloan hated him more than anything.

How History Remembers Them: King Benjaïen inherited the throne at 18 years of age after his father King Haliour Layern Patton I died from the stress and exhaustion of building a kingdom and dynasty. Because Benjaïen was still considered young, his mother Queen Walica Kevena Patton acted as regent for six years until he officially took full power at age 24. Benjaïen resented this arrangement deeply, viewing it as his mother's attempt to control his life even after he was crowned king. When his mother arranged his marriage to her distant cousin Vala Uinara Patton in 8,732BR, Benjaïen's resentment only deepened. He knew Vala had been placed at his side to monitor him and report back to his mother. He called his wife "an old prude," "a worthless bitch," and "the bane of his existence," hating that she was three years older than him and, as he cruelly put it, "looked more like a king than him." He was openly jealous of her bearing and presence, and he took his frustrations out on her constantly. Benjaïen had no interest in politics or governance, preferring instead the company of lovers, both men and women. He fathered many bastard children and was reportedly a good father to them, even as he neglected and mistreated his legitimate wife. Throughout his early reign, he was very immature and childish, and his kingdom suffered for it.

Everything changed with the deaths of his mother in 8,709 BR and his wife in 8,715 BR. Queen Vala was most likely poisoned by Benjaïen himself, though this was never proven. After their deaths, Benjaïen's lovers Araner and Jelkita stepped into the role of royal advisors, and to everyone's surprise, King Benjaïen was able to do a complete reversal. Free from the women he blamed for controlling his life, he finally applied himself to ruling and became someone capable of matching his father's legacy. He constructed thousands of bridges and dams, improved infrastructure throughout Aicruae, and helped resolve several internal disputes between noble houses. He was loved by the common people. Yet despite this transformation, he and his legitimate children maintained a deeply estranged relationship. His daughter Cawiloan never forgave him for how he treated her mother, and she openly expressed her disgust with his lifestyle until the day he died.

POWER & POSITION

Highest Title Held:King of Aicruae (2nd)

Political Faction:House Patton belongs to the Divine Fraction, those who believe in the divine right of the monarchy and the nobility class system. Benjaien's reign was marked more by personal conflict than factional politics; he spent his early years resisting his mother's influence and his later years pursuing his own pleasures before finally applying himself to governance.

Key Allies:Araner and Jelkita (his lovers who became his chief advisors after his mother and wife's deaths; they are credited with helping him transform into an effective ruler), Lenkitta Arvento (the founder of House Arvento who served as advisor to both Benjaien and his father, providing continuity and counsel), King Ilaem Nefest Patton I (his son, whom he doted on and favored above all his other children, considering him the apple of his eye).

Key Enemies:Queen Walica Kevena Patton (his mother, whom he hated for controlling his life during the regency and for arranging his marriage to Vala; he reportedly wished her dead), Queen Vala Uinara Patton (his wife, whom he openly despised, mistreated, and most likely murdered), Queen Cawiloan Heka Patton (his daughter, who hated him more than anything for his treatment of her mother and refused to attend his funeral), and the noble factions who wanted House Patton to fail during his weak early reign.

LEGACY

Immediate Impact:Benjaien's transformation after his mother and wife's deaths surprised everyone who knew him. The bridges and dams he constructed improved trade, travel, and flood management throughout Aicruae. His resolution of internal disputes maintained the stability his father had established. While his personal life remained scandalous, his public works earned him the love of the common people and proved that House Patton could survive beyond its legendary founder. Long-Term Impact:Benjaien's son King Ilaem Nefest Patton I was able to build upon his father's infrastructure works during his own reign. The bridges and dams Benjaïen constructed remained in use for generations. Though, his most significant long-term impact may be the family trauma he inflicted. His daughter Cawiloan's fierce devotion to her mother's memory and hatred of her father shaped her own reign and influenced how she raised her children, including the great King Haliour Layern Patton II. The contrast between Benjaïen's cruelty and Haliour II's legendary devotion to his wife Queen Isalian can be traced directly to Cawiloan's determination that her children would never repeat her father's sins.

How Later Generations View Them:

Monuments/Memorials: The thousands of bridges and dams Benjaïen constructed throughout Aicruae stand as his lasting monuments. But, his grave was untended by order of his daughter Cawiloan, who forbade anyone from caring for it after his death. While later generations have restored some maintenance, the neglect of his burial site in the years immediately following his death was a deliberate statement about his legacy. His lovers Araner and Jelkita were expelled from court by Cawiloan after his death, erasing their influence from the palace.

Descendant Characters: Through his son King Ilaem Nefest Patton I and daughter Queen Cawiloan Heka Patton (who married each other in the consanguineous tradition of early House Patton), Benjaïen is an ancestor of the entire subsequent Patton line. This includes King Haliour Layern Patton II, King Viake Recreadion Patton (the worst king in Aicruae's history), Princess Karinoa Nalia Patton, King Sayero Walica Patton (named after Queen Walica), and eventually Emperor Solis Elias Patton (the protagonist of A Tale of A Thousand Songs). Every Patton after him carries his blood.

Where This Figure Appears in Canon:

Contradictory Accounts (if any): The question of whether Benjaïen actually poisoned Queen Vala is technically unproven, though widely believed. The fact that he doted so heavily on their son Ilaem (who somewhat resembled Vala) "caused doubts among the people as to whether King Benjaien actually poisoned Queen Vala", his obvious love for the boy seemed to contradict the theory that he would murder the child's mother. Whether this was genuine affection or guilt remains unclear.

NOTES

King Benjaien lived to be 80 years old (8,754 BR —8, 674 BR), one of the longer-lived Patton monarchs. His wife Vala died when he was only 39, meaning he ruled as a widower (with his lovers as advisors) for approximately 41 years, far longer than his unhappy marriage. The fact that he accomplished more in those 41 years than in the previous 39 proves that his resentment toward his mother and wife genuinely impaired his ability to rule effectively. His favoritism toward his son Ilaem over his daughter Cawiloan is particularly notable given that Ilaem "looked more like his mother than his father" while Cawiloan resembled Vala so strongly that Benjaien "openly detested" the resemblance. This is because Benjaien's hatred of Vala was more about the control she represented (placed there by his mother) than about her appearance, otherwise, he would have hated Ilaem for the same reason. The name "Nefest" appears as a middle name for several Patton kings (Ilaem Nefest I, Ilaem Nefest II), and it became a traditional royal middle name passed down through the male line.

HISTORICAL SIGNIFICANCE

Known For:Overcoming lifelong illness to become an accomplished diplomat and successful king; being deeply favored by his father King Benjaïen; continuing and building upon his father's infrastructure works despite only ruling for 15 years

Major Accomplishments:Expanded on his father's construction of bridges and dams. Achieved significant diplomatic successes during his reign.Maintained stability and prosperity despite his chronic illness

Commanded such respect that his death prompted a thirty-day mourning period, one of the longest in early Aicruaeae history.

Major Failures:Neglected his children in favor of his imperial duties. Was a "terrible father" despite being a good king. His estrangement from his children mirrors (in reverse) his own father's estrangement from him.

How History Remembers Them:As a tragic figure who sacrificed personal relationships for duty. While his father King Benjaïen was a good father but poor king (until later in life), Ilaem was the inverse, a good king but poor father. His death at his son's bedside was regret and a final attempt at reconciliation.

NOTES

Ilaem inherited his mother's sickly constitution, both spent much of their lives ill. Despite physical resemblance to his mother (Queen Vala), his father King Benjaïen favored him so strongly that it almost contested the rumors that Benjaïen had poisoned Vala. His marriage to his sister Cawiloan followed House Patton's practice of sibling marriage to keep the bloodline pure. The circumstances of his death are notable: found dead in front of his son's bed in the early morning, going to seek reconciliation/forgiveness before death. His wife Queen Cawiloan outlived him by 19 years (dying in 8,640BR) and continued to influence the court, including initially opposing her son's marriage to Isalian Liazen.

Princess Asayera's death from Sela Meysei (Night Terrors) removed the succession concerns the council had about her potentially usurping Haliour II.

Nation: Aicruae

Known For: King Haliour Layern Patton II is known for being the fourth king of Aicruae and for ushering in the Second Golden Age of House Patton, the first golden age since the country's founding. He is celebrated for his legendary, all-consuming love for his wife Queen Isalian Liazen, a devotion so complete that he became known as "The Flower King" because he ensured every portrait of him contained flowers after learning she loved them. He is also known for winning Isalian's heart through years of persistent courtship, including writing her daily poems, fighting in countless tournaments in her honor, and famously presenting her with a crown made of roses at a tournament in 8,658BR. He invented Aicruae's first known contraceptives when his wife said she only wanted two children. He and Queen Isalian together created many of Aicruae's most popular foods and recipes, introduced the concept of balanced diet and exercise, and their love story inspired twelve commissioned songs and countless other fantastical tales.

Major Accomplishments: Created the Second Golden Age of House Patton alongside his wife, transforming Aicruae into a flourishing cultural center. Built libraries and cultural institutions dedicated to his family. Co-created with Queen Isalian some of Aicruae's most beloved and enduring foods and dishes, establishing culinary traditions that persisted for centuries. Invented the first known contraceptives in Aicruae, a three-year research project undertaken purely because his wife expressed she wanted only two children. Granted nobility to Milane Caraen in 8,643BR, recognizing his talent and founding House Caraen, one of Aicruae's most respected noble houses, to protect the capital. Successfully defied his mother Queen Cawiloan and the entire court to marry the woman he loved rather than accept an arranged marriage to his sister. His marriage to Isalian, despite initial opposition, "became one of the most successful to ever exist." Raised two children who became "rulers equally as great as their parents." Major Failures: His father King Ilaem was a "terrible father" who neglected his children for imperial duties, and Haliour grew up with that emotional distance, only learning his father sought reconciliation when Ilaem was found dead at his bedside. His obsessive pursuit of Isalian during their youth, while ultimately successful, involved following her around and "scaring away all her potential suitors," behavior that would be considered inappropriate by many standards. His descendants included King Viake Recreation Patton, "the worst king in all of Aicruae's history," who perpetrated the Massacre of Light (90,000 deaths). Though Haliour died before witnessing these horrors, his bloodline produced this tragedy. His sister Princess Asayera Atani Patton died of Sela Meysei (Night Terrors) just three months after he took the throne. While this removed the political obstacle to his marriage with Isalian, losing his sister was undoubtedly painful, and some do view the timing as suspiciously convenient (though there is no evidence of foul play).

How History Remembers Them: King Haliour was once a rebellious prince who enjoyed nothing more than hunting and partying, engaging in mundane trivial activities and acting without a real purpose in life. When his father King Ilaem died in 8,659 BR, Haliour ascended the throne at age thirteen. The council suggested he marry his sister Princess Asayera Atani Patton to stop growing concerns about her possibly usurping him, but King Haliour had already fallen for his distant cousin Isalian Liazen, who at the time was left with a considerable dowry and was the ward of his mother Queen Cawiloan. Everyone, including his mother, disapproved of the union. King Haliour had met Isalian when he was ten years old, in 8,662 BR, after her family was killed during a territorial fight that left Isalian and her sister as the last Liazen heirs (her sister died). From the moment he met her, he followed her around and scared away all her potential suitors, sent her poems every day, and fought in countless tournaments in her honor until he became king. The reason his mother and the court rejected his offer was because they really loved his sister Princess Asayera Atani Patton. Unfortunately for them, the princess fell ill with Sela Meysei (Night Terrors) and died three months after King Haliour took the throne. This allowed King Haliour to finally marry the woman he loved. He was obsessed with his wife. When he heard that she liked flowers, he made sure every portrait drawn of him had flowers in it, earning him the nickname "The Flower King." When his wife told him she only wanted two children, he invented the first known contraceptives, which took him three years to make. His union with Isalian Liazen became one of the most successful royal marriages to ever exist, and together they created the Second Golden Age of House Patton. It became apparent to everyone with a brain just how in love King Haliour Layern Patton II was. He dedicated everything in his life to his wife and children, from poems to flowers to libraries; he spared no expense to make sure everyone was aware of just how much he loved them. He and his wife created some of Aicruae's most popular and common foods and were big foodies who created the idea of a balanced diet and exercise.

Highest Title Held: King of Aicruae (Fourth)

Political Faction: House Patton belongs to the Divine Fraction, those who believe in the divine right of the monarchy and nobility class system. Haliour's reign was marked less by political maneuvering and more by cultural innovation and domestic devotion. He successfully navigated early court opposition to his marriage and transformed potential enemies into supporters through the undeniable success of his reign.

Key Allies: Queen Isalian Liazen (his wife, the center of his universe and his partner in creating the Second Golden Age), Queen Cawiloan Heka Patton (his mother, who initially opposed his marriage to Isalian but later accepted and supported the union), Princess Naila Deyua Patton and Prince Teravian Geraser Patton (his devoted children), Milane Caraen (a talented swordsman whom Haliour recognized and elevated to nobility, founding House Caraen to protect the capital city; Milane became a close friend, and Haliour was devastated when he passed away), and House Arvento (the long-standing allies of House Patton since the founding).

Key Enemies: Initially, the council, the court, and his mother Queen Cawiloan all opposed his marriage to Isalian, preferring his sister Princess Asayera instead. But, these opponents were won over after Asayera's death and the clear success of the marriage. Haliour made remarkably few enemies during his reign; his dedication to his family and his cultural contributions gave opponents little to criticize. Any lingering resentment from the Liazen territory's absorption into Aicruae was smoothed over by Isalian herself becoming queen and being beloved by the people.

LEGACY

Immediate Impact: Haliour's marriage to Isalian transformed both himself and the kingdom. The rebellious prince who had no purpose became a devoted husband and effective ruler. Together they created cultural institutions, culinary traditions, and architectural innovations that immediately improved life in Aicruae. His recognition of talented commoners like Milane Caraen and his willingness to elevate them to nobility based on merit rather than birth created loyal new houses that strengthened the crown. The Second Golden Age began with his reign and represented a flourishing of arts, food, architecture, and happiness not seen since the country's founding.

Long-Term Impact: The foods and dishes Haliour and Isalian created together became staples of Aicruaeen cuisine, still eaten in Solis's era over a thousand years later. The concept of balanced diet and exercise they introduced shaped Aicruaeen health practices. House Caraen, which Haliour founded by recognizing Milane's talent, became one of the most respected noble houses, serving as protectors of the capital for generations. The twelve songs his son Teravian commissioned about his parents' love story preserved their legend for posterity. The statue "Mother, Father, Wife and Their Humble Servant" (publicly called "the Liazen Royals") stood in the royal garden as a monument to their family.

Isalian's birthday became a royal holiday. The libraries Haliour built endured. Most significantly, Haliour proved that a royal marriage could be both a love match and a successful political union, setting a standard against which all future Patton marriages would be measured.

How Later Generations View Them: Later generations view Haliour as the ideal king and husband. His legendary devotion to Isalian became the romantic standard against which all Aicruaeen love stories were measured. Characters in later eras reference his marriage as what a successful union should look like.

Monuments/Memorials: The statue "Mother, Father, Wife and Their Humble Servant" (publicly called "the Liazen Royals") commissioned by his son Prince

Teravian, depicting Teravian, his wife (Queen Naila), and their parents (Haliour and Isalian), placed in the royal garden and still standing in Solis's era. Twelve commissioned songs about his and Isalian's love story. Countless other songs and fantastical tales inspired by their romance. Queen Isalian's birthday was established as a royal holiday by Prince Teravian. The libraries he built were dedicated to his family. The foods and dishes he and Isalian created, preserved in Aicruaeen culinary tradition. House Caraen itself serves as a monument to his eye for talent and his willingness to elevate worthy commoners. His nickname "The Flower King" endured as a term of affection.

Descendant Characters:Through his daughter Princess Naila Deyua Patton and son Prince Teravian Geraser Patton (who married each other in the consanguineous tradition of House Patton), Haliour is an ancestor of the entire subsequent Patton line. His descendants include: King Viake Recreadion Patton (the "Skunk King" who perpetrated the Massacre of Light), Princess Karinoa Nalia Patton (the last Liazen heiress who renounced her claim and joined the Cidet), King Sayero Walica Patton (named after Queen Walica), King Benjamin Lawrence Patton I, and eventually Emperor Solis Elias Patton (the protagonist of A Tale of A Thousand Songs). Every Patton after him carries his blood.

Events Referenced in Books:The foods Haliour and Isalian created are still eaten in Solis's era, providing a direct connection between their golden age and the story's present. Their love story serves as a template for what a successful royal marriage can look like, contrasting sharply with the troubled relationships of later generations. The Second Golden Age they created is referenced as a high point against which later periods are measured.

How Characters View Them:His love story with Isalian represents the best-case scenario in a world where most royal marriages are political arrangements or outright disasters. His devotion, his cultural contributions, and his happiness stand in stark contrast to the violence and tragedy that characterize much of Patton history.

NOTES

King Haliour Layern Patton II lived 83 years (8,672 BR - 8,589 BR), one of the longer-lived Patton monarchs. He outlived his wife Isalian by only one year (she died in 8,590 BR, he in 8,589 BR), her death may have hastened his own. Haliour outlived his close friend Milane Caraen, and then his wife Isalian died in 8, 590BR, with Haliour following just a year later in 8, 589BR. The old king lost the people closest to him in his final years. Their son Prince Teravian outlived both parents but was clearly devoted to preserving their memory. The name "Haliour" (meaning "Noble One") was first used by the dynasty's founder, King Haliour Layern Patton I. By giving his son this name, King Ilaem signaled hope that his heir would match the founder's greatness. In many ways, Haliour II exceeded expectations, creating a golden age that rivaled the founding era. The fact that his father King Ilaem was found dead at his bedside, apparently seeking reconciliation after a lifetime of neglect, affected Haliour deeply. His own extreme devotion to his children, his determination to make sure "everyone was aware of just how much he loved them," may have been a conscious rejection of his father's emotional distance. His invention of contraceptives to honor his wife's wish for only two children is remarkable both for its scientific achievement and for its demonstration of respect for her bodily autonomy in an era when queens were expected to produce as many heirs as possible.

Known For:King Consort Teravian Geraser Patton is known for being the first male royal consort in Aicruae's history. He was the beloved younger child of King Haliour Layern Patton II and Queen Isalian Liazen, called "the little treasure" since childhood. He is remembered for his devoted efforts to preserve and honor his parents' legendary love story, commissioning twelve songs about their romance and establishing his mother Queen Isalian's birthday as a royal holiday. He also commissioned the famous statue "Mother, Father, Wife and Their Humble Servant" (publicly called "the Lizaen Royals") which still stands in the royal garden. Throughout his lifetime, he earned seven medals of honor including The Medal of Soalm.

Major Accomplishments:Commissioned twelve songs documenting his parents' legendary love story, ensuring their romance would be remembered for generations. Established Queen Isalian Liazen's birthday as an official royal holiday, a tradition that persisted for centuries. Commissioned the giant statue "Mother, Father, Wife and Their Humble Servant" (the Lizaen Royals) depicting himself, his wife Queen Naila, and their parents Haliour II and Isalian, placed in the royal garden where it still stands. Earned seven medals of honor throughout his lifetime, including The Medal of Soalm, demonstrating his service to the kingdom despite holding a consort role rather than ruling directly. Supported his sister-wife Queen Naila's reign with unwavering loyalty, providing a model of how male consorts could serve the crown with honor and dignity.

Major Failures:Major Failures: Teravian predeceased his wife Queen Naila by eighteen years (dying in 8,577 BR while she lived until 8, 559BR), leaving her to rule alone for nearly two decades. His children, while raised during the Second Golden Age, failed to inherit their grandparents' virtues: his son King Viake Recreation Patton became "the worst king in all of Aicruae's history" and perpetrated the Massacre of Light, while his daughter Princess Capaillia Assontionia Patton died young (8,619 BR —8, 605BR). Though Teravian died before witnessing the worst of Viake's atrocities, his bloodline produced this tragedy. After the death of his devoted knight Asjart Caraen in 8,579 BR, Teravian's own health deteriorated rapidly; he died just two years later, because he struggled to cope with the accumulated losses of his parents and closest companions.

How History Remembers Them:Prince Teravian Geraser Patton was the first male royal consort in Aicruae's history, a role he embraced with grace and devotion. Born the younger child and only son of King Haliour Layern Patton II and Queen Isalian Liazen, Teravian was called "the little treasure" from childhood, deeply loved by members of the royal family and the people of Aicruae alike.Unlike many royal sons who might have resented being passed over for the throne in favor of an elder sister, Teravian seemed content in his role as consort to Queen Naila Deyua Patton. His life's work was not building his own legacy but preserving and honoring his parents' extraordinary love story. He commissioned twelve songs about his parents' romance, ensuring that the tale of King Haliour's obsessive devotion to Queen Isalian would be sung for generations. He established his mother's birthday as a royal holiday, a gesture of filial love that also kept her memory alive in the public consciousness.Before his death, Teravian commissioned his greatest memorial: a giant statue depicting himself, his wife

Queen Naila, and their parents Haliour II and Isalian. He called it "Mother, Father, Wife and Their Humble Servant," a title that captured his self-perception as a devoted servant to those he loved rather than a figure seeking glory for himself. The public came to call it "the Lizaen Royals," honoring Queen Isalian's maiden name, and it was placed in the royal garden where it still stands centuries later.

Throughout his lifetime, Teravian earned seven medals of honor including The Medal of Soalm, demonstrating that his gentle nature did not preclude service to the kingdom. His knight was Lord Asjart Caraen, grandson of Milane Caraen (the founder of House Caraen whom Teravian's father had elevated to nobility). Asjart was deeply loyal to the prince, especially as Teravian experienced so much loss during his lifetime. When Asjart died in 8,579BR, just two years before Teravian himself, the prince's health deteriorated rapidly. The loss of his devoted companion, coming after the deaths of his father in 8,589 BR and his mother in 8,590 BR, seemed to break something in Teravian. He died in 8,577 BR at the age of 79, outliving both his parents but predeceasing his sister-wife Queen Naila by eighteen years. She would continue to rule alone, defending the Patton legacy against foreign representatives who questioned why a woman held power instead of her male consort, famously quoting her mother: "No matter how sad the fact is, Queens aren't allowed to be victims."

POWER & POSITION

Highest Title Held: King Consort of Aicruae (the first male to hold this title)

Political Faction: House Patton belongs to the Divine Fraction, those who believe in the divine right of the monarchy and nobility class system. Teravian himself was not a political figure in any active sense; he supported his wife Queen Naila's rule and focused his efforts on cultural preservation rather than political maneuvering.

Key Allies: Queen Naila Deyua Patton (his sister-wife, whom he supported throughout her reign), King Haliour Layern Patton II (his father, who raised him with the same devotion he showed all his family), Queen Isalian Liazen (his mother, whose memory he honored throughout his life), Lord Asjart Caraen (his loyal knight, grandson of Milane Caraen, who served him faithfully until his death in 8,579BR), and House Caraen (the noble house his father founded, which remained loyal protectors of the crown).

Key Enemies: Teravian made remarkably few enemies during his lifetime. His gentle nature, his position as consort rather than ruler, and his focus on honoring his parents rather than accumulating power gave opponents little to attack. The foreign representatives who challenged Queen Naila's right to rule as a woman (prompting her famous quote of her mother's wisdom) might be considered indirect enemies, but their frustration was directed at Naila rather than at Teravian personally.

LEGACY

Immediate Impact: Teravian's death in 8,577 BR left Queen Naila to rule alone for the remaining eighteen years of her life. His cultural contributions, the twelve commissioned songs and the establishment of Isalian's birthday as a holiday, immediately enriched Aicruaeen traditions. The statue "the Lizaen Royals" became a pilgrimage site of sorts for those who remembered the Second Golden Age and wished to honor the family that had created it.

Long-Term Impact: Teravian established the precedent that a male royal consort could serve honorably and contribute meaningfully to the kingdom without ruling directly. His example proved that Aicruae's female-led succession (during this period) could function smoothly with supportive male consorts. The twelve songs he commissioned preserved his parents' love story for posterity, ensuring that Haliour II and Isalian's romance became not just a family memory but a cultural touchstone referenced across generations. The statue "the Lizaen Royals" still stands in the royal garden in Solis's era, over a thousand years later, as a monument to the Second Golden Age. Unfortunately, his son King Viake Recreasion Patton would become Aicruae's worst ruler, perpetrating the Massacre of Light and undoing much of the goodwill the Patton dynasty had accumulated.

How Later Generations View Them:

Monuments/Memorials: The statue "Mother, Father, Wife and Their Humble Servant" (publicly called "the Lizaen Royals") commissioned by Teravian and placed in the royal garden, still standing in Solis's era. Queen Isalian Liazen's birthday was established as a royal holiday by Teravian. The twelve commissioned songs about his parents' love story, preserved in Aicruaeen musical tradition. The Medal of Soalm and six other medals of honor he earned throughout his lifetime. His grave, which unlike his great-grandfather King Benjaen's, was properly tended and honored.

CONNECTIONS TO NARRATIVE

Descendant Characters:Through his marriage to his sister Queen Naila Deyua Patton, Teravian is the father of King Viake Recreadion Patton (the "Skunk King" who perpetrated the Massacre of Light) and Princess Capaillia Assontionia Patton (who died young at age 14). His descendants through Viake include Princess Karinoa Nalia Patton (the last Liazen heiress who joined the Cidet), King Sayero Walica Patton (named after Queen Walica), King Benjamin Lawerence Patton I, and eventually Emperor Solis Elias Patton (the protagonist of A Tale of A Thousand Songs). NOTES

Teravian lived 69 years (8,646 BR - 8,577 BR). His name meaning "Immortal Joy" is bitterly ironic given that his children brought tremendous suffering to Aicruae, but it was meant to capture the joy his parents felt at his birth and the happiness of the era into which he was born.

The title "King Consort" rather than simply "King" is a reflection of Aicruae's Matsiali culture (the more liberal, female-respecting culture that predated Goteivati the Damned's reforms), which allowed female rulers to hold primary power with their husbands serving in supportive roles. Teravian was the first male to hold this specific position, establishing a precedent for future generations.

His knight Asjart Caraen was the grandson of Milane Caraen, the commoner swordsman whom Teravian's father King Haliour II had elevated to nobility and made founder of House Caraen. This connection meant that the Caraen family's loyalty to House Patton was particularly strong during Teravian's lifetime, spanning three generations. The rapid decline in Teravian's health after Asjart's death in 8,579 BR was due to deep emotional dependency. Having lost his mother (8,590 BR), then his father (8, 589BR), and then his closest companion and protector, Teravian simply lost the will to continue. He died just two years after Asjart, leaving his wife Naila to rule alone for nearly two more decades.

Known For: Being universally regarded as the worst king in all of Aicruae's history; perpetrating the Massacre of Light

Major Accomplishments: None of historical note. King Viake's reign is remarkable for its complete absence of positive achievements. He never commissioned any public works, never mediated any disputes, and never contributed to the cultural or economic development of Aicruae. The only "accomplishment" attributed to his reign is the construction of a new royal estate outside the capital, which was funded entirely by his wife's excessive taxation, and he and his wife died in a fire at this very estate.

Major Failures: Allowed his wife Queen Mari to deplete the royal treasury, Permitted unchecked inflation of taxes on the populace. Never attended official royal business; his wife effectively ruled the country in his stead. Ordered the massacre of 90,000 followers of the Order of the Pure Ones in 8,558 BR for no justifiable reason

How History Remembers Them: King Viake Recreadion Patton is remembered as the worst king in all of Aicruae's history, a disgrace to the Patton name who squandered the Second Golden Age his grandparents had created.

Born to Queen Naila Deyua Patton and King Consort Teravian Geraser Patton, Viake was the grandson of the legendary King Haliour Layern Patton II and Queen Isalian Liazen, whose love story had inspired twelve songs and whose reign had ushered in the Second Golden Age. The contrast between Viake and his grandparents could not have been more stark. Where Haliour II had been devoted and hardworking, Viake was lazy and indifferent. Where Isalian had enriched the treasury and introduced countless innovations, Viake's wife Queen Mari depleted it through reckless spending and crushing taxes.

Viake married Mari Liazen, a woman from a distant branch of the Liazen family. Mari used the Liazen name to benefit from Queen Isalian's enduring popularity, but she had no direct connection to the main royal family branch. If the Liazen territory had still existed, Mari would not have been permitted to use the name at all. From the moment he took the throne, Viake showed no interest in ruling. He never attended official business, preferring instead to indulge in whatever idle pleasures caught his attention while his wife made all decisions. The people suffered under Mari's inflated taxes, watching the royal treasury their grandparents' generation had built be drained for frivolous expenditure. Viake earned the epithet "The Skunk King" because he was considered foul and repulsive, and "The Weak King" because he was too spineless to actually govern. In 8,558BR, when Viake was 71 years old, he and Queen Mari perpetrated the Massacre of Light, ordering the slaughter of 90,000 followers of the Order of the Pure Ones. The Order was a pacifist religious sect that rejected worship of the gods and instead venerated the Saints as "pure vessels." They practiced the Four Abstinences and emphasized communal charity. Their pacifism made them easy targets, and King Viake's forces killed men, women, and children alike. The massacre was committed for no justifiable reason beyond royal paranoia and fanaticism, likely because the sect's growing influence challenged traditional religious authority. The surviving Pure Ones went underground, where their teachings were preserved only in secret. His own daughter Princess Karinoa Nalia Patton was so horrified by her parents' tyranny that she fled the royal family at age eighteen, renouncing her claim to the throne and joining the Cidet. She swore never to have children out of fear of them inheriting what she called "Demon Blood." His son Prince Sayero Walica Patton, who would eventually inherit the throne, continued his father's tyrannical lifestyle despite his sister's disapproval.

King Viake and Queen Mari died together in a fire while visiting another royal estate in 8,552 BR. The circumstances were never fully explained to the public, but given the hatred they had earned, many suspected sabotage. In an extraordinary final insult, no mourning ceremony was held for either of them, a deliberate and public rejection of their legacy by the very kingdom they had ruled.

POWER & POSITION

Highest Title Held:King of Aicruae (Fifth)

Political Faction:House Patton belongs to the Divine Fraction, those who believe in the divine right of the monarchy and nobility class system. Yet, Viake himself had no political interests whatsoever. He abdicated all governance responsibilities to his wife Queen Mari, who held actual power during his reign.

Key Allies:Queen Mari Patton/Liazen (his wife, who held actual power and made all decisions during his reign), the court factions that benefited from Mari's corruption and excessive spending, and the religious authorities who supported the persecution of the Order of the Pure Ones (whether out of genuine conviction or fear of royal displeasure)

Key Enemies:The Order of the Pure Ones (the pacifist religious sect he and Mari massacred in 8,558 BR), Princess Karinoa Nalia Patton (his own daughter, who fled the royal family and denounced their "Demon Blood"), the common people of Aicruae (who suffered under crushing taxes and received nothing in return), and by extension anyone who remembered what House Patton had been under his grandparents and saw what it had become under him.

LEGACY

Immediate Impact:Financial ruin of the royal treasury, suffering among the common people from inflated taxes, near-extinction of an entire religious sect.King Viake and Queen Mari targeted the Order of the Pure Ones, a religious sect that rejected worship of the gods and instead venerated the Saints as "pure vessels." The Order taught the "Four Abstinences" (abstaining from violence, consuming animal flesh, reproduction outside holy unions, and magical practices) and emphasized communal charity and pacifism, they would not fight except in defense of children.This pacifism made them easy targets. 90,000 men, women, and children were slaughtered in what became known as the Massacre of Ligh, so called because it “extinguished so many lives of the enlightened.” The massacre was committed “for no reason” beyond royal paranoia and fanaticism, likely because the sect’s growing influence challenged traditional religious authority. The surviving Pure Ones went underground, their teachings preserved only in secret.

Long-Term Impact: The Order of the Pure Ones was driven underground but survived; by 8,094 BR they had rebuilt a secret following among nobles, eventually contributing to later conflicts like the Taguar Murders.

How Later Generations View Them:

Monuments/Memorials: King Viake and Queen Mari both died in a fire while visiting another royal estate. The circumstances were not detailed to the public, but given the hatred they earned, sabotage cannot be ruled out. No mourning ceremony was held for either of them, a deliberate and public rejection of their legacy. The only “memorial” to Viake’s reign is the near-extinction of the Order of the Pure Ones and the cultural memory of the Massacre of Light. In Solis’s era, the scarcity of Pure One followers in Aicruae is directly attributed to Viake’s atrocity, his legacy is measured in the religious practices that no longer exist because of him.

CONNECTIONS TO NARRATIVE

Descendant Characters: Through his son King Sayero Walica Patton (named in tribute to Queen Walica Kevena Patton despite King Viake’s terrible reign), Viake is an ancestor of the entire subsequent Patton line. His descendants include King Benjamin Lawrence Patton I, Queen Toavaliae Javivata Patton, King Lacaseian Emere Patton, and eventually the 2nd Generation Royal Family including King Ilaem Nefest Patton II, King Benjamin Lawrence Patton II, and Emperor Solis Elias Patton (the protagonist of A Tale of A Thousand Songs). Every Patton after him carries his blood, a fact his daughter Karinoa found so horrifying she chose to end her own branch of the line entirely.

Events Referenced in Books: The Massacre of Light serves as historical context for religious persecution in Aicruae.

How Characters View Them: His daughter Princess Karinoa fled the royal family at 18, denouncing her claim to the throne and swearing never to have children “out of fear of them inheriting what she called Demon Blood”, a direct rejection of her parents’ legacy.

NOTES

King Viake lived 77 years (8,629 BR - 8,552 BR), one of the longest-lived Patton monarchs, which makes his reign of terror all the more extensive. He outlived both his parents, his father King Consort Teravian (who died in 8,577 BR) and his mother Queen Naila (who died in 8,559 BR, seven years before Viake's own death). The timing means his mother didn't get to witness the Massacre of Light (8,558 BR) but she died just one year before it, her final year was spent knowing her son had become history's greatest monster without the real blunt of his tyranny (the massacre of light) haven been witnessed by her. Which would have devastated her because she had stepped down, so that her son could rule. The name "Viake" means "Littlest Star," an ironic choice given that he brought darkness rather than light to Aicruae. His parents, raised during the Second Golden Age by the legendary Haliour II and Isalian, hoped their son would continue that legacy.

His wife Queen Mari came from a distant branch of the Liazen family, not the main royal line. She used the Liazen name to benefit from Queen Isalian's enduring popularity, but her connection was tenuous at best. If the Liazen territory had still existed as an independent entity, Mari would not have been permitted to use the name. This makes her exploitation of the Liazen legacy particularly galling, she traded on Isalian's memory while helping destroy everything Isalian had built. The Massacre of Light occurred in 8, 558BR, when Viake was 71 years old, he spent most of his reign as a passive, neglectful king before committing his greatest atrocity near the end of his life because The Order of Pure Ones growing influence challenged the traditional religious establishment that supported royal authority. His two children could not have been more different in their responses to their parents' evil. Princess Karinoa fled at eighteen, denounced the family, and chose extinction over continuation of the bloodline. Prince Sayero stayed and "continued the same lifestyle as their father and mother," perpetuating the tyranny until his own death from Sela Meysei (Night Terrors).

Aryanara ~ 14,300— ~ 14,200BR (approximate)

Aryanara was one of the twin prophets who co-founded the Circle of Eternal Light in 14,271 BR. She and her sister Vekta were the first to articulate that death was merely a pause in a longer song, that souls carried traces of past lives into new bodies, and that corruption was the only true ending. They were not saints—they carried no fraction of a god's power—but they lived close enough to the age of saints to witness miracles firsthand. Aryanara was the more contemplative twin, drawn to the philosophical and metaphysical aspects of the soul's journey. She recorded Vekta's speeches, and these writings became the foundational texts of the Circle. She established a teaching center in what became the eastern heartland of Gherci, in fertile river valleys that attracted scholars and thinkers. She emphasized memory, the way souls carry echoes of past lives, and the eternal nature of the spirit. After her death, her territory became a place of pilgrimage. The lands were incorporated into Gherci by Saint Duri in 8,763 BR and are protected by House Catern.

Vekta ~ 14,300— ~ 14,200BR (approximate)

Vekta was one of the twin prophets who co-founded the Circle of Eternal Light in 14,271 BR, alongside her sister Aryanara. She was the more practical sister, focused on the rituals and daily practices that kept a soul pure. She established a teaching center in what became the northern highlands of Gherci, near the mist-shrouded mountains forming the border with Equateiy, drawing pilgrims seeking purification and protection. She emphasized action—how to live in harmony with the Song, how to recognize the signs of corruption, how to protect oneself and others from spiritual decay. She and Aryanara discovered the Ilkai herb during their studies of the soul cycle. Her famous quote: "They hear the good word of Song and defile it by calling it a cage. They do not understand that the cage is the only thing keeping them whole." After her death, her territory became a place of pilgrimage. The lands were incorporated into Gherci by Saint Duri in 8,763 BR and are protected by House Catern.

[SAINT ALIIRUSK]

Name Meaning: [TBD]

[The Godly Saint, First of the Saints, First Saint]

DATES & ERA

Born: 18, 765BR

Died: 18,740 BR (Battle of Wena)

Era: Era of Divine Presence / Pre-civilization

Years Active: 18, 765 — 18, 740 BR (25 years)

IDENTITY

Full Name: Aliirusk (no surname; predates House naming conventions)

House/Family: None (predates noble house system)

Ethnicity: [TBD — likely Sun-Forged]

Appearance: [TBD]

Nation: None (predates all kingdoms; mortals still in tribal/clan structures)

Known For: Being the first human ever chosen as a Saint. The god Finore blessed him with divine power, inaugurating the Era of Saints - the age when gods directly empowered chosen mortals to guide humanity.

Major Accomplishments: Dedicated his entire life to serving both gods and humans. Wandered the land calming conflicts and stepping into the middle of wars to broker peace. Beloved by mortals and divinities alike, he became a symbol of hope during a violent age. His selfless mission set the template for what a Saint should be.

Major Failures: His naivety. Aliirusk was endlessly loved but also endlessly trusting. He walked into the Battle of Wena believing he could stop the bloodshed, and it cost him his life at 25 years old.

How History Remembers Them: Aliirusk is remembered as “The Godly Saint” - the purest and most universally beloved of all thirteen Saints. He was kind, sweet, and loving, always willing to do whatever it took to bring about peace. His death devastated the gods so deeply that they punished all of humanity with famine, storms, and plague. The month of Yita (January) was created after his death. His Zodiac/Eternal Sign is Yir (Remorseless, Detached, Cold) - a bitter irony given his warmth in life.

POWER & POSITION

Highest Title Held: First Saint (blessed by Finore, God of the Forge)

Key Allies: Finore (patron god)

Key Enemies: The mortals at the Battle of Wena who caused his death; the mobs who later murdered his family

LEGACY

Immediate Impact: His death triggered divine retribution — famine, storms, and plague struck the mortal world. Finore descended to retrieve Aliirusk’s body personally, an act unprecedented in divine-mortal relations.

Long-Term Impact: Aliirusk became one of only four Saints buried in the kingdom of the gods. Finore forged the legendary weapon Allironek from Aliirusk’s spirit - the first saintly relic, said to carry Aliirusk’s resolve. His death permanently fractured trust between gods and mortals; the gods learned humanity could kill their beloved champions, and humanity learned the gods would punish them collectively. The Tragedy of Enaner (the murder of Aliirusk’s parents and infant child by vengeful mobs) deepened this rift further.

How Later Generations View Them: Universally revered as the gold standard of sainthood. No subsequent Saint was ever as uncontroversially loved.

Monuments/Memorials: Buried in the kingdom of the gods. Allironek (weapon forged from his spirit). Statue erected among the ten saintly monuments in Gherci’s capital by Saint Duri. Month of Yita named in his honor.

CONNECTIONS TO NARRATIVE

Descendant Characters: His one-year-old child was murdered in the Tragedy of Enaner; no known surviving descendants.

Events Referenced in Books: The Battle of Wena, the Tragedy of Enaner, the forging of Allironek
How Characters View Them: [TBD]

SOURCES

Where This Figure Appears in Canon: Timeline (multiple entries), Religion (Saints section), Canon document (Saints list #1)

Contradictory Accounts (if any): None - Aliirusk's story is one of the most consistent across sources.

Aliirusk left behind his father, mother, and a one-year-old child. Shortly after his death, all three were murdered by human mobs who falsely blamed them for the divine punishment, despite the family being explicitly spared from the gods' wrath. This became known as the Tragedy of Enaner. The event permanently stained the god-mortal relationship: the gods saw that humanity's cruelty extended even to the innocent families of their champions.

[SAINT BURA]

Name Meaning: [TBD]

[Mother Greatest, The Second Saint]

DATES & ERA

Born: 17, 600BR

Died: 17,540 BR

Era: Era of Divine Presence / Pre-civilization

Years Active: 17,600-17,540 BR (60 years)

IDENTITY

Full Name: Bura (no surname; predates House naming conventions)

House/Family: None

Ethnicity: [TBD]

Appearance: [TBD]

Nation: None (predates all kingdoms)

HISTORICAL SIGNIFICANCE

Known For: Being the second Saint and one of the greatest builders in history. Blessed by the sky-god Vapaz, she is one of only two Saints to receive his gift (the other being Reron). Unlike the tragic Aliirusk before her, Bura's life was comparatively peaceful and productive.

Major Accomplishments: Created thirty cities across the land. Established a vast irrigation system to nourish those cities. Built roads and canals connecting settlements for the first time. Founded the first schools for girls (~ 17, 550BR) - a groundbreaking achievement that sparked a quiet cultural revolution. The girls she educated became her assistants, helping establish towns and spread knowledge across regions. Women began participating in governance and infrastructure projects for the first time.

Major Failures: Maintaining the unity of the communities she created proved to be a challenge. The cities she built eventually developed independently, and the cooperative network she envisioned didn't hold together perfectly after her death.

How History Remembers Them: Bura is affectionately called "Mother Greatest" for her role in nurturing nascent communities. She was known for her creativity, organizational skills, and trustworthiness. Her educational reforms planted the early seeds of gender equality in an era dominated by superstition and warfare. The month of Dar (February) was created after her death. Her Zodiac/Eternal Sign is Darzi (Deceitful, Humorous, Committed).

POWER & POSITION

Highest Title Held: Second Saint (blessed by Vapaz, King of the Gods)

Key Allies: Vapaz (patron god); the girls she educated who became her assistants

Key Enemies: None noted - her life was not marked by the violent opposition other Saints faced

LEGACY

辭

Immediate Impact: Thirty new cities established. Infrastructure (roads, canals, irrigation) connecting previously isolated settlements. First schools for girls opened.

Long-Term Impact: The prosperity of her cities endured as a lasting legacy. Her educational reforms created a precedent for female participation in public life. Her infrastructure achievements brought stability and growth during an uncertain time. The cities, irrigation systems, and road networks she created became the physical foundations that later kingdoms would build upon.

How Later Generations View Them: Revered as a maternal, civilizing figure. Her city-building and educational work are seen as foundational achievements of mortal civilization.

Monuments/Memorials: Statue erected among the ten saintly monuments in Gherci's capital by Saint Duri. Month of Dar named in her honor.

Descendant Characters: [None noted]

Events Referenced in Books: Referenced in worldbuilding as the origin of organized settlement and female education

How Characters View Them: [TBD]

SOURCES

Where This Figure Appears in Canon: Timeline (multiple entries), Canon document (Saints list #2) Contradictory Accounts (if any): None noted.

NOTES

Bura led an ordinary life seeking only comfort before Vapaz's gift inspired her toward grand achievements. The contrast between her humble beginnings and monumental accomplishments makes her one of the most aspirational Saints. Her comparatively long lifespan of 60 years gave her time to achieve what most Saints - who died young and violently - never could.

[SAINT GALAMMA]

Name Meaning: [TBD]

[The Lost One, The Third Saint]

DATES & ERA

Born: 15,870 BR

Died: 15,852 BR (executed by villagers)

Era: Era of Saints and Paranoia

Years Active: 15,870-15,852 BR (18 years)

IDENTITY

Full Name: Galamma (no surname)

House/Family: Born to a widowed mother

Ethnicity: [TBD]

Appearance: [TBD]

Nation: None (predates all kingdoms)

HISTORICAL SIGNIFICANCE

Known For: Being one of the most tragic Saints in all of history. The third Saint, she was falsely accused of demonic heritage during a time of rampant religious hysteria and executed at just 18 years old.

Major Accomplishments: One of the few Saints believed to have been able to directly communicate with her patron god. Many believe Galamma and Sielaph were very close - an unusually intimate divine-mortal bond.

Major Failures: None - Galamma's tragedy was entirely the fault of others. She was a victim of prejudice and religious psychosis, not of any personal failing.

How History Remembers Them: Galamma is remembered as "The Lost One" - a holy innocent murdered by the very people she was meant to serve. She was born during a heavily religious period when people suspected of being "demons" (the term was applied loosely to heretics and those who didn't show sufficient faith) were kidnapped and executed. A misunderstanding led others to believe she was such a person. She spent her final moments full of fear and in agony. She was best described as outgoing, adventurous, and easygoing. The month of Lac (March) was created after her death. Her Zodiac/Eternal Sign is Laca (Bossy, Quick-Thinking).

POWER & POSITION

Highest Title Held: Third Saint (blessed by Sielaph)

Key Allies: Sielaph (patron god - they were said to be very close)

Key Enemies: The hysterical villagers who abducted and executed her

LEGACY

Immediate Impact: Her unjust execution prompted stricter scrutiny of witch hunts. People began to realize that fear and prejudice had led to the murder of a holy innocent.

Long-Term Impact: Galamma became a cautionary tale about religious hysteria and mob violence. Her death highlighted that even a divinely blessed Saint could fall victim to human prejudice. The god Sielaph insisted she be buried in the kingdom of the gods, making her the second Saint (after Aliirusk) to receive that honor.

How Later Generations View Them: Viewed with deep sympathy. Her story serves as a warning about the dangers of paranoia, prejudice, and jumping to conclusions.

Monuments/Memorials: Buried in the kingdom of the gods (at Sielaph's insistence). Statue erected in Gherci's capital by Saint Duri. Month of Lac named in her honor.

Descendant Characters: [None noted]

Events Referenced in Books: Referenced in worldbuilding as an example of religious persecution and the dangers of witch-hunt culture

How Characters View Them: [TBD]

Where This Figure Appears in Canon: Timeline, Canon document (Saints list #3)
Contradictory Accounts (if any): None noted.

NOTES

The religious psychosis of Galamma's era is described as a time when "not actual demons, but religious psychosis was very prevalent" - people called heretics demons, and not showing faith in the gods would get you labeled as one. This climate of fear is what killed Galamma. Her death at 18 makes her one of the youngest Saints alongside Malign (also 18).

[SAINT DORTHARGEL]

Name Meaning: [TBD]

[God's Favorite, The Fourth Saint]

DATES & ERA

Born: 13, 052BR

Died: 13,020 BR (illness)

Era: Age of Laws and Wrath

Years Active: 13, 052 — 13, 020 BR (32 years)

IDENTITY

Full Name: Dorthargel (no surname)

House/Family: [Family name unknown - they buried her before Nellebrie could claim the body] Ethnicity: [TBD]

Appearance: Unique red hair (the trait that drew Nellebrie's attention - "hair is said to be a reflection of one's soul, and for Nellebrie, Dorthargel was the first human she saw with that hair color") Nation: None (predates all kingdoms)

Known For: The extraordinary bond she shared with the goddess Nellebrie (Goddess of Disasters). Their relationship - almost like mother and daughter - became one of the greatest reminders of the gods' love for their Saints. Dorthargel developed her powers closer to the end of her life and never actually saw Nellebrie in person, yet thought of her as a mother.

Major Accomplishments: Nellebrie chose Dorthargel because of her soulful singing and unique red hair. They often played together and sang songs with one another, communicating through an intimate bond despite never meeting face to face.

Major Failures: None - Dorthargel died of illness, not through any personal failing. Her early death was simply tragic circumstance.

How History Remembers Them: Dorthargel is remembered as "God's Favorite" — a modest, generous, and loyal person whose death triggered one of the most catastrophic divine outbursts in history. The month of Ni (April) was created after her death. Her Zodiac/Eternal Sign is Inari (Hypersensitive, Conceited, Emotional).

POWER & POSITION

Highest Title Held: Fourth Saint (blessed by Nellebrie, Goddess of Disasters)

Key Allies: Nellebrie (patron goddess - deeply devoted to Dorthargel)

Key Enemies: None

LEGACY

Immediate Impact: Her death triggered "Nellebrie's Wrath" — the goddess destroyed entire cities, caused earthquakes across the mortal plane, and begged the other gods to end her life out of guilt. The cataclysm only ceased when Dorthargel's family quietly buried her, and Nellebrie, in a rare moment of restraint, chose not to disturb the grave out of respect.

Long-Term Impact: Nellebrie's Wrath became legendary as a "lover's lament" of the gods - a devastating reminder of how deeply deities could love their chosen mortals, and how destructive their grief could be. Dorthargel could not be buried in the kingdom of the gods because her family had already buried her, and Nellebrie refused to disturb her rest

“because of her selfishness” (Nellebrie’s own self-description of her desire to take the body).

How Later Generations View Them: Viewed with deep tenderness. Dorthargel represents the purest form of the divine-mortal bond - love without agenda, expressed through song and play.

Monuments/Memorials: Buried by her family (location unknown). Statue erected in Gherci’s capital by Saint Duri. Month of Ni named in her honor.

Descendant Characters: [None noted]

Events Referenced in Books: Nellebrie’s Wrath is referenced as a major cataclysmic event in the Timeline

How Characters View Them: [TBD]

Where This Figure Appears in Canon: Timeline (Nellebrie’s Wrath entries), Canon document (Saints list #4), Era 4 synopsis

Contradictory Accounts (if any): None noted.

NOTES

Dorthargel is the only Saint whose patron deity’s reaction to their death caused a named cataclysmic event (Nellebrie’s Wrath). The detail that she “never actually saw Nellebrie in person” yet considered her a mother adds a poignant layer - their entire relationship existed through song, play, and spiritual connection rather than physical presence.

[SAINT EREN]

Name Meaning: [TBD]

[The Wrong Choice, The Fifth Saint]

DATES & ERA

Born: 12,467 BR

Died: 12,441 BR (beaten to death by commoners)

Era: Age of Laws and Wrath

Years Active: 12,467-12,441 BR (26 years)

IDENTITY

Full Name: Eren (no surname)

House/Family: [Unknown]

Ethnicity: [TBD]

Appearance: [TBD]

Nation: None (predates all kingdoms)

HISTORICAL SIGNIFICANCE

Known For: Being the first Saint openly rejected by humanity. Blessed by Nimlye, Queen of the Gods, Eren abandoned his saintly duties to roam the world. His dereliction incited mortal outrage, and commoners eventually hunted him down and beat him to death. He is derisively nicknamed "The Wrong Choice."

Major Accomplishments: None of note - Eren ignored his duties as a Saint and spent his brief life adventuring instead. However, his story became a turning point in divine-mortal relations.

Major Failures: Abandoned his saintly responsibilities entirely. Led a very idealistic life, venturing out into the world while neglecting the people he was meant to serve. His irresponsibility directly led to his death and became a permanent stain on the institution of sainthood.

How History Remembers Them: Eren is remembered as "The Wrong Choice" - the Saint who didn't deserve his gift. Most consider him foolish rather than malicious. He wasn't a bad person; he was just young and not versed in the ways of the world. This is why many believe Nimlye favored him - some even say he was more favored than Nimlye's own son. The month of Saer (May) was created after his death. His Zodiac/Eternal Sign is Sera (Insecure, Non-Judgmental, Reluctant).

POWER & POSITION

Highest Title Held: Fifth Saint (blessed by Nimlye, Queen of the Gods)

Key Allies: Nimlye (patron goddess - was very fond of him and mourned him deeply)

Key Enemies: The commoners who hunted and killed him; the gods who refused him burial in their realm

Immediate Impact: His murder marked the first time humans openly rejected a god's chosen Saint, highlighting growing discontent with divine decisions. The other gods refused Eren burial in their realm, deeming him unworthy.

Long-Term Impact: Nimlye, heartbroken, created an enchanted mirror (separate from the cursed Mirrors of Nimlye from myth) and placed Eren's body and soul inside it. She had Finore refine the mirror into a necklace talisman, which she wears around her neck at all times - preserving Eren's essence as a permanent private memorial. The tale of Eren starkly illustrated the fraying relationship between mortals and the gods' chosen.

How Later Generations View Them: A cautionary tale. Some view him with sympathy (he was young and foolish, not evil), while others see him as proof that the gods could make mistakes in choosing their champions.

Monuments/Memorials: Not buried in the kingdom of the gods (refused by other deities). His soul preserved in Nimlye's enchanted mirror-necklace. Statue erected in Gherci's capital by Saint Duri. Month of Saer named in his honor.

CONNECTIONS TO NARRATIVE

Descendant Characters: [None noted]

Events Referenced in Books: The rejection of Eren is referenced as a turning point in divine-mortal relations

How Characters View Them: [TBD]

Where This Figure Appears in Canon: Timeline, Canon document (Saints list #5), Era 4 synopsis Contradictory Accounts (if any): None noted — Eren’s story is consistent across sources, though opinions on whether he deserved his fate differ.

NOTES

The enchanted mirror Nimlye created for Eren is explicitly noted as separate from the cursed Mirrors of Nimlye described in the myths. Eren’s mirror-necklace is a memorial object, not one of the five dangerous mirrors that drove pirates mad. The detail that Eren may have been “more favored than Nimlye’s own son” raises questions about divine attachment and the nature of the gods’ relationships with mortals.

[SAINT ARGELLON]

Name Meaning: [TBD]

[The Second Choice, The Sixth Saint]

DATES & ERA

Born: 11,002 BR

Died: 10,952 BR (natural/peaceful death)

Era: Age of Laws and Wrath

Years Active: 11, 002 — 10, 952 BR (50 years)

IDENTITY

Full Name: Argellon (no surname)

House/Family: Had an elder brother (name unknown) who died in war

Ethnicity: [TBD]

Appearance: [TBD]

Nation: None formally, though his Code of Esa became the constitutional foundation for Aicruae

HISTORICAL SIGNIFICANCE

Known For: Creating the Code of Esa - a comprehensive moral and legal code emphasizing fair taxation, trade rights, and justice that became the de facto constitution for the Kingdom of Aicruae and influenced lawmaking for generations. He is nicknamed "The Second Choice" because the goddess Paha's gift was originally intended for his elder brother, who died suddenly in war.

Major Accomplishments: Drafted the Code of Esa, the most enduring legal framework in the world's history. Built the first great Temple of Paha - a monumental shrine where he buried his brother beneath a statue of the goddess. Unified legal principles across many social orders and noble houses, bringing order and fairness to a once lawless land.

Major Failures: None noted - Argellon is one of the few Saints to live a full life and die peacefully. His achievements were almost entirely positive.

How History Remembers Them: Argellon is remembered as headstrong, bold, and dedicated. Despite the "Second Choice" nickname suggesting inadequacy, he rose to the occasion and surpassed expectations, creating a legal legacy that outlasted nearly every other Saint's contributions. He died at 50 - one of the few Saints to die peacefully - and was buried with honor beside his brother in Paha's temple. The month of Ocinyi (June) was created after his death. His Zodiac/Eternal Sign is Cinyu (Content, Temperamental, Can't Say No).

POWER & POSITION

Highest Title Held: Sixth Saint (blessed by Paha, Goddess of Horses)

Key Allies: Paha (patron goddess); his late brother (whose memory drove his work)

Key Enemies: None noted

LEGACY

Immediate Impact: The Code of Esa established unified legal principles for taxation, trade, and justice. The first Temple of Paha created a center of worship and remembrance.

Long-Term Impact: The Code of Esa became the constitutional foundation for the Kingdom of Aicruae. Many social orders and noble houses adopted its principles. It directly influenced the later Arvento Code (8,126 BR), which became Aicruae's formal legal system. Argellon's work created the legal infrastructure that made organized kingdoms possible.

How Later Generations View Them: Revered as the father of law. The Code of Esa is still referenced and used as the foundation for legal systems millennia after Argellon's death.

Monuments/Memorials: Buried beside his brother in the first Temple of Paha. Statue erected in Gherci's capital by Saint Duri. Month of Ocinyi named in his honor.

Descendant Characters: [None noted]

Events Referenced in Books: The Code of Esa is referenced throughout Aicruan legal and political history

How Characters View Them: [TBD]

Where This Figure Appears in Canon: Timeline, Canon document (Saints list #6), Legal Code section (Code of Esa references)

Contradictory Accounts (if any): None noted.

NOTES

Argellon's story carries a theme of living in someone else's shadow - he was never supposed to be the Saint, his brother was. Yet he turned that inherited responsibility into perhaps the most practically impactful achievement of any Saint. The detail of burying his brother beneath a statue of Paha in the temple he built is a quietly powerful gesture of love and honor.

[SAINT SIRIANDE]

Name Meaning: [TBD]

[The Unlucky, The Seventh Saint]

DATES & ERA

Born: 10, 567BR

Died: 10,533 BR (poisoned by her son)

Era: Age of Laws and Wrath

Years Active: 10, 567 — 10, 533 BR (34 years)

IDENTITY

Full Name: Siriande (no surname)

House/Family: Daughter of a local fisherman

Ethnicity: [TBD]

Appearance: [TBD]

Nation: None (predates all kingdoms)

HISTORICAL SIGNIFICANCE

Known For: Creating the Yerian Laws — the first formal set of protections and rights for women, covering property ownership and personal safety. Also known for her tragic death: poisoned by her own son, who she forgave with her dying breath.

Major Accomplishments: Enacted the Yerian Laws, making her one of history's earliest champions of women's rights. Constructed dams for flood control - practical public works that saved lives and protected communities. Nearly drowned as a child but was saved by the goddess Zopha, who gifted her saintly powers out of sympathy.

Major Failures: Her relationship with her son. Consumed by ambition, he ultimately poisoned her to seize power. Siriande knew his intent but drank the poisoned cup willingly, hoping to spare his soul.

How History Remembers Them: Siriande is remembered as "The Unlucky" for the tragedy that befell her family. Her life was neither as long nor as short as other Saints, but her death was among the most heartbreaking - betrayed by the child she raised. She is honored as the Saint who established women's legal rights. The month of Fasteri Adei (July) was created after her death. Her Zodiac/Eternal Sign is Adeta (Perceptive, Non-Rebellious, Unsympathetic).

POWER & POSITION

Highest Title Held: Seventh Saint (blessed by Zopha, Goddess of the Sea)
Key Allies: Zopha (patron goddess - saved her as a child and avenged her death)
Key Enemies: Her own son (name unknown)

LEGACY

Immediate Impact: The Yerian Laws established formal protections for women. Her dam construction protected communities from flooding.

Long-Term Impact: The Yerian Laws became a foundational legal framework for gender rights, later strengthened and updated by Saint Malign. Her dying wish was to be buried among humans, not in the gods' realm, out of humility - she is one of the few Saints to explicitly refuse divine burial. In her final moments, she begged Zopha to forgive and spare her son. Zopha honored one request: she spared the son's life but cursed him mute, so he could never again speak lies or ask forgiveness. The son committed suicide five years later; Zopha ensured his grave was drenched in eternal rain, denying him peace for his matricide.

How Later Generations View Them: Admired for her selflessness and legal achievements, pitied for her family tragedy. Her willingness to drink the poison knowingly - to spare her son's soul - is considered one of the most noble acts in saintly history.

Monuments/Memorials: Buried among humans (by her own request). Statue erected in Gherci's capital by Saint Duri. Month of Fasteri Adei named in her honor.

CONNECTIONS TO NARRATIVE

Descendant Characters: Her son (name unknown — cursed mute by Zopha, committed suicide ~ 10, 528BR); possibly other descendants through other children [not confirmed]

Events Referenced in Books: The Yerian Laws are referenced throughout the legal and social history of the world

How Characters View Them: [TBD]

D

Era 4 synopsis, Legal Code references

Contradictory Accounts (if any): None noted.

The detail of Zopha's curse on Siriande's son is strikingly specific: muteness (so he cannot speak lies or ask forgiveness) and eternal rain on his grave (denying him peace even in death). This is one of the clearest examples of a god taking personal vengeance for a Saint's death. Siriande's origin as a fisherman's daughter who nearly drowned as a child gives her one of the most humble backgrounds of any Saint.

[SAINT NAIRAN]

Name Meaning: [TBD]

[Little Princess, The Eighth Saint]

DATES & ERA

Born: 10,012 BR

Died: 9,983 BR (complications from childbirth)

Era: Age of Reform and Mystery

Years Active: 10,012-9,983 BR (29 years)

IDENTITY

Full Name: Nairan (no surname, though the "Little Princess" nickname suggests noble birth)

House/Family: Daughter of a powerful leader of a small town; first Saint from a wealthy family Ethnicity: [TBD - said to be from the area that later became Gherci]

Appearance: [TBD]

Nation: From the area that would later become Gherci

HISTORICAL SIGNIFICANCE

Known For: Demonstrating that Saints need not be warriors or martyrs. Her anti-corruption systems and scientific approach to medicine proved that quiet kindness could reshape the world. She received Allan's blessing after a chance encounter aiding an injured animal - Allan (Goddess of Nature) in disguise.

Major Accomplishments: Created anti-corruption systems to hold officials accountable. Championed a scientific approach to medicine, developing and modifying remedies that saved lives. Proved that saintly power could be used for institutional reform rather than warfare or spectacle.

Major Failures: None of her own - Nairan died at 29 from complications during childbirth, leaving behind three young daughters. Her death was natural tragedy, not a result of failure.

How History Remembers Them: Nairan is called "Little Princess" due to her privileged upbringing unique among Saints, who were typically from humble backgrounds. She was chosen without any extraordinary trait besides her kindness (she helped what she thought was an injured deer, which was actually Allan in disguise). She is remembered as gentle, effective, and ahead of her time. The month of FASTERI ADEO (August) was created after her death. Her Zodiac/Eternal Sign is ADETO (Neat, Disinterested).

POWER & POSITION

Highest Title Held: Eighth Saint (blessed by Allan, Goddess of Nature)

Key Allies: Allan (patron goddess)

Key Enemies: Corrupt officials targeted by her reform systems

Immediate Impact: Anti-corruption frameworks established. Medical practices improved through her scientific approach.

Long-Term Impact: Willow trees are said to bloom in Gherci because of her death - a divine memorial tied to her connection with Allan and the region. Her three young daughters survived her, though their names and fates are unknown. Her work proved that sainthood could mean institutional reform and compassionate governance, not just miracles and martyrdom.

How Later Generations View Them: Admired as proof that privilege doesn't preclude genuine goodness. Her story challenges the assumption that only the poor and suffering can be truly virtuous.

Monuments/Memorials: Willow trees blooming in Gherci (divine memorial). Statue erected in Gherci's capital by Saint Duri. Month of Fasteri Adeo named in her honor.

CONNECTIONS TO NARRATIVE

Descendant Characters: Three young daughters (names unknown; survived her)

Events Referenced in Books: Referenced in the context of anti-corruption and medical reform

Contradictory Accounts (if any): None noted.

NOTES

Nairan is the first Saint explicitly described as coming from wealth. Her nickname "Little Princess" and her father's status as a "powerful leader of a small town" set her apart from the humble origins of most Saints. The detail that Allan chose her simply for helping an injured animal - without knowing it was a goddess in disguise - emphasizes that genuine kindness, not calculated piety, is what draws divine attention.

[SAINT KARNIODE]

Name Meaning: [TBD]

[The Gentle One, The Ninth Saint]

DATES & ERA

Born: 9, 365BR

Died: 9,351 BR (fell/pushed off a cliff)

Era: Age of Reform and Mystery
Years Active: 9,365-9,351 BR (14 years)

IDENTITY

Full Name: Karniode (no surname)

House/Family: Unknown - records were deliberately destroyed. Myth claims her father was the mortal fisherman Qanyaso, through a union with Zopha (unconfirmed legend).

Ethnicity: [TBD - possibly from Aseraga, Baeistic, Urdeio, or Feacener, the four territories that would later become Pireaynea]

Appearance: Blind from birth

Nation: Possibly from the proto-Pireaynean territories

Known For: Being one of the most mysterious Saints in history. Blind from birth, she was blessed by the goddess Zopha at age 13 and could allegedly part oceans at will. Nearly all records of her were deliberately destroyed - her name and likeness burned from history books. What little is known comes from fragments and folklore.

Major Accomplishments: Allegedly could part oceans - one of the most dramatic supernatural abilities attributed to any Saint. Blessed by Zopha at a remarkably young age (13).

Major Failures: None attributed to her personally. Her existence was so unbelievable that for years many doubted she was even real.

How History Remembers Them: Karniode is remembered as "The Gentle One," spoken of only in hushed tones by the few survivors who knew her. Her tale is half legend, half conspiracy. Her story underscores how tenuous the line between myth and reality can be. The month of Lacai (September) was created after her death. Her Zodiac/Eternal Sign is Acai (Nice, Easy-Going, Comical).

POWER & POSITION

Highest Title Held: Ninth Saint (blessed by Zopha, Goddess of the Sea, at age 13)

Key Allies: Zopha (patron goddess - possibly her mother, according to myth)

Key Enemies: Whoever destroyed her records; possibly a family member who may have pushed her off the cliff

LEGACY

Immediate Impact: After her death, a massive tsunami obliterated her entire village, killing most who knew her. This catastrophic event was interpreted as either divine retribution or divine sorrow at her passing.

Long-Term Impact: Karniade became the third of only four Saints buried in the kingdom of the gods - a significant honor given how little is officially known about her. Nearly all records of her life were deliberately destroyed. Her legacy is largely lost to time, surviving only through whispered folklore and the lingering belief that her ocean-parting gift was real.

How Later Generations View Them: She remains a figure of mystery and conspiracy. Some doubt she existed at all. Those who believe in her view her with reverence and awe.

Monuments/Memorials: Buried in the kingdom of the gods (third of four Saints to receive this honor). Her village was destroyed by tsunami after her death. Statue erected in Gherci's capital by Saint Duri. Month of Lacai named in her honor.

CONNECTIONS TO NARRATIVE

Descendant Characters: [None noted - records destroyed]

Events Referenced in Books: Referenced in the context of mystery and lost history

How Characters View Them: [TBD]

Where This Figure Appears in Canon: Timeline, Canon document (Saints list #9 - implied), Era 5 synopsis

Contradictory Accounts (if any): Significant. Her parentage is disputed (mortal fisherman Qanyaso + Zopha, or ordinary mortal parents). Whether she was pushed off the cliff or fell is debated. Whether she was even real has been questioned by historians.

Karniode's story raises more questions than it answers: Why were her records deliberately destroyed? Who burned her name and likeness from history books? Why would a family member push a blind girl off a cliff? The tsunami that destroyed her village conveniently eliminated most witnesses. At 14 years old, she may be the youngest Saint to die. The deliberate destruction of her records suggests someone powerful wanted her erased from history - but who, and why, remains unknown.

[SAINT MALIGN]

Name Meaning: [TBD]

[The Sacred Knight, The Tenth Saint]

DATES & ERA

Born: 9, 323BR

Died: 9,305 BR (assassinated)

Era: Age of Reform and Mystery

Years Active: 9,323-9,305 BR (18 years)

IDENTITY

Full Name: Malign (no surname)

House/Family: Had a beloved sister (name unknown) who died defending him during his assassination

Ethnicity: [TBD]

Appearance: [TBD]

Nation: None (predates all kingdoms)

Known For: His crusade for social justice - economic equality, women's rights, and freedom of speech. Earned the title "The Sacred Knight" for his chivalrous dedication to these causes. His assassination at 18 made him a martyr whose ideas spread even more widely after his death.

Major Accomplishments: Led a crusade for economic equality - at one point, drank only salt water for days to draw attention to the plight of the poor. Boldly promoted women to high positions of power, strengthening and updating Saint Siriande's Yerian Laws. Became a staunch defender of free speech and freedom of the press, even inviting criticism of himself. Famously declared: "If you have no enemies, then you have no friends."

Major Failures: His progressive stances made him fierce enemies. He was ultimately ambushed and slain by those threatened by his reforms. His beloved sister died defending him in the attack.

How History Remembers Them: Malign is remembered as a martyr and reformer whose brief life inspired generations. Even the god Finore, who blessed him, is said to have chosen him because they shared values. His assassination shocked the world and made his ideas spread even further than they had during his lifetime. The month of Baer (October) was created after his death. His Zodiac/Eternal Sign is Baerin (Welcoming, Individualistic).

POWER & POSITION

Highest Title Held: Tenth Saint (blessed by Finore, God of the Forge)

Key Allies: Finore (patron god - shared his values); his sister (died defending him)

Key Enemies: Those threatened by his reforms - political enemies who arranged his assassination

Immediate Impact: His assassination made him a martyr. His ideas about economic equality, women's rights, and free speech spread even more widely after his death. Many continued to champion his causes.

Long-Term Impact: Saint Duri, the greatest of all Saints, was personally obsessed with Malign. She worshipped him like an idol, believed he was "taken before his time," and spent her entire life trying to spread his beliefs. This one-woman crusade to honor Malign's legacy was a driving force behind many of Duri's own reforms. Malign's brief life cemented the principle that moral leadership can challenge even entrenched social norms.

How Later Generations View Them: Deeply revered. His quote about enemies and friends remains well-known. He represents the ideal of a principled reformer who stood by his convictions even when it cost him everything.

Monuments/Memorials: Statue erected in Gherci's capital by Saint Duri (given particular prominence due to Duri's devotion). Month of Baer named in his honor.

Descendant Characters: [None noted - died at 18]

Events Referenced in Books: His reforms and assassination are referenced as formative events in the development of gender equality and free speech traditions

How Characters View Them: [TBD]

Where This Figure Appears in Canon: Timeline, Canon document (Saints list #10 - implied), Era 5 synopsis

Contradictory Accounts (if any): None noted.

NOTES

Malign's death during "a holy celebration" (per the Era 5 synopsis) adds extra horror - he was killed at what should have been a sacred, protected event. His sister's unnamed sacrifice (dying to defend him) is a powerful detail that deserves further development. At 18, Malign achieved more for social reform than many who lived decades longer. His influence on Duri - who became arguably the most accomplished Saint of all - means his legacy was multiplied exponentially through her devotion to his cause.

[SAINT DURI]

Name Meaning: [TBD]

[Queen of the People, The True Saint, Duri the Wise, The Mother of Gherci, The Eleventh Saint]

DATES & ERA

Born: 8, 747BR

Died: 8, 670BR

Era: The Warriors' Age (8, 900 — 7, 945BR)

Years Active: 8, 747 — 8, 670 BR (77 years - the longest-lived Saint by far)

IDENTITY

Full Name: Duri (no surname noted; later known by her many titles)

House/Family: Founder and ruler of Gherci; established House Mava as the ruling royal house

Ethnicity: [TBD]

Appearance: [TBD]

Nation: Founded the Kingdom of Gherci in 8,763 BR

HISTORICAL SIGNIFICANCE

Known For: Being the most accomplished Saint in history. The only Saint to found, rule, and die as monarch of a nation (Gherci). The longest-lived Saint at 77 years. Never lost a single battle. Blessed by Allan, Goddess of Nature, who believed Duri was destined for greatness.

Major Accomplishments: Founded the Kingdom of Gherci ("The Land of Eternal Silence") in 8,763 BR. Created the first formal judicial court system to ensure laws like the Code of Esa were upheld impartially. Authored military strategies that became classics of warfare, studied by generals for centuries. Constructed an international trade route linking Gherci's markets with distant lands. Established

"Tanya's" - the world's first free public hospitals for common folk. Erected monuments to all ten Saints before her in Gherci's capital, placing their statues as protective sentinels around the city while humbly making her own statue the smallest. Spent her life spreading the beliefs of Saint Malign, whom she idolized.

Major Failures: Many historical texts describe Duri as cold and standoffish. Her personal relationships appear to have suffered for her public achievements. Her diaries reveal a woman carrying immense guilt over the lives she took in battle.

How History Remembers Them: Duri has more titles than any other Saint: "Queen of the People," "The True Saint," "Duri the Wise," "The Mother of Gherci." She was the most powerful and wisest of the Saints. She is the fourth and final Saint buried in the kingdom of the gods, honored for her unparalleled accomplishments. The month of Niserfa (November) was created after her death. Her Zodiac/Eternal Sign is Sinfa (Outspoken, Pompous, Illogical).

POWER & POSITION

Highest Title Held: Queen of Gherci / Eleventh Saint (blessed by Allan, Goddess of Nature) Key Allies: Allan (patron goddess); the memory of Saint Malign (her idol)

Key Enemies: All who opposed Gherci's founding and expansion - though none ever defeated her in battle

LEGACY

Immediate Impact: Gherci established as a unified, powerful kingdom. Judicial courts, military academies, trade routes, and public hospitals created. The ten Saints memorialized in Gherci's capital.

Long-Term Impact: Gherci stood as a beacon of enlightened rule for centuries. Duri's judicial courts, military strategies, trade routes, and hospitals improved common life across the world. Her decision to make her own statue the smallest of the eleven saintly monuments in Gherci became a famous symbol of humility and service. She is the last of four Saints buried among the gods - after her, no Saint would receive that honor.

How Later Generations View Them: Revered as the greatest Saint. Her diaries - in which she wrote the name of every enemy soldier she killed, penning "I am sorry" beside each name - revealed a compassionate heart beneath her cold exterior.

Monuments/Memorials: Buried in the kingdom of the gods (fourth and final Saint to receive this honor). Her own statue (the smallest) among the eleven saintly monuments in Gherci's capital. Month of Niserfa named in her honor. "Tanya's" public hospitals. International trade routes. Judicial court system.

CONNECTIONS TO NARRATIVE

Descendant Characters: Gherci's royal House Mava descends from or is established by Duri's political legacy

Events Referenced in Books: The founding of Gherci; the Warriors' Age

How Characters View Them: [TBD]

SOURCES

Where This Figure Appears in Canon: Timeline (multiple entries), Canon document (Saints list #11) Warriors' Age synopsis, Location entries for Gherci

Contradictory Accounts (if any): Historical texts describe her as cold and standoffish; her diaries reveal deep compassion and guilt. These aren't contradictions so much as different layers of the same person.

NOTES

Duri's obsession with Saint Malign is one of her most defining traits - she "worshipped him like an idol" and "thought that Malign was taken before his time." This devotion drove much of her life's work. Her famous quote: "To have existed for as long as I have, one must ultimately reconcile with those who once stood as their adversaries, even if they remain oblivious to such gestures of peace. For it is the divine, in their omniscience, who observes the full spectrum of our deeds and moral failings." The detail about her diary - recording every kill with "I am sorry" - is one of the most emotionally powerful details in the entire worldbuilding canon.

[SAINT RERON]

Name Meaning: [TBD]

[Ender of Worlds, The Twelfth Saint, The Taboo Saint]

DATES & ERA

Born: 7,450 BR

Died: 7,402 BR (Battle of Relirian)

Era: Post-Warriors' Age

Years Active: 7,450-7,402 BR (48 years)

IDENTITY

Full Name: Reron (no surname noted)

House/Family: Son of a mortal woman named Mevi (who was falsely accused of seducing Vapaz). Had a wife (name unknown, murdered), an eldest daughter (murdered), and a youngest child whom he hid in Equateiy.

Ethnicity: [TBD]

Appearance: [TBD]

Nation: [TBD - operated across multiple territories; hid his youngest child in Equateiy]

HISTORICAL SIGNIFICANCE

Known For: Being the most controversial Saint in history. A "taboo Saint" - depending on who tells the story, he was or was not truly a Saint. Blessed by Vapaz (the second of only two Saints to receive Vapaz's gift, alongside Bura), Reron used his powers not for peace but for vengeance after the murder of his wife and eldest daughter. He destroyed villages and killed many people at will, earning the nickname "Ender of Worlds."

Major Accomplishments: [None in the traditional sense - Reron's "achievements" were acts of destruction driven by grief and vengeance]

Major Failures: Reron's entire story is one of tragedy and moral failure - not his own, but the world's failure toward him, and then his failure to channel his grief into anything but violence. He abused his saintly powers for revenge, killing indiscriminately and destroying communities. His campaign of vengeance made him a figure of terror.

How History Remembers Them: Reron is deeply divisive. Many sympathize with him, saying he only killed and destroyed to avenge his family. Others say he abused his power as a Saint for petty revenge. His mother Mevi was hanged after being labeled "a witch and a temptress who seduced the god Vapaz" - the recurring theme of mortals accusing others of breaking divine rules. Young Reron was left as a beggar. When he manifested his abilities at 24, the people used his wife and children as hostages to force him to perform his duties as a Saint.

Eventually, his captors killed his wife and eldest daughter. He rescued his youngest child and hid her in Equateiy, never seeing her again. The month of Agariso (December) was created after his death. His Zodiac/Eternal Sign is Gariso (Carefree, Friendly, Charming) - another sharp irony given his violent life.

POWER & POSITION

Highest Title Held: Twelfth Saint (blessed by Vapaz, King of the Gods)

Key Allies: Vapaz (patron god); his youngest child (hidden in Equateiy)

Key Enemies: Those who hanged his mother, held his family hostage, and murdered his wife and eldest daughter

LEGACY

Immediate Impact: His campaign of destruction devastated villages and killed untold numbers. The Battle of Relirian - his final stand - was apocalyptic: Reron ensured no enemy left the battlefield alive, unleashing the full fury of Vapaz's power before dying himself at age 48 amid a pile of his slaughtered foes.

Long-Term Impact: Reron's story made the concept of sainthood permanently complicated. He proved that divine power in the hands of a broken person could be catastrophically destructive. His infamy is second only to Saint Harnua (the 13th Saint). Debates about whether Reron was "truly" a Saint persist into the present era of the narrative. His youngest child, hidden somewhere in Equateiy, may have descendants — but their identities are unknown.

How Later Generations View Them: Deeply divided. Some view him as a tragic hero driven to madness by injustice. Others view him as proof that the gods' choices were fallible. His story is considered taboo to discuss openly.

Monuments/Memorials: No known monuments (given his controversial status). Statue erected in Gherci's capital by Saint Duri (as part of her memorial to all Saints before her). Month of Agariso named in his honor. The Battle of Relirian site.

Descendant Characters: His youngest child was hidden in Equateiy - potential descendants unknown
Events Referenced in Books: The Battle of Relirian; referenced throughout as the prime example of a "failed" or "dark" Saint

How Characters View Them: [TBD]

Where This Figure Appears in Canon: Timeline (Battle of Relirian entry), Canon document (Saints list #12)

Contradictory Accounts (if any): Whether Reron was "truly" a Saint is actively debated. Whether his mother actually had an affair with Vapaz or was falsely accused is unclear. Whether his vengeance was justified is a matter of perspective.

NOTES

Reron's story contains a recurring theme from the canon: "mortals will always accuse other mortals and even saints of breaking some divine rule." His mother's execution on charges of seducing Vapaz mirrors the false accusations that killed Saint Galamma. The detail that Reron manifested his abilities at 24 and was immediately enslaved through hostage-taking shows that even divine power couldn't protect him from mortal cruelty when his loved ones were leveraged against him. His youngest child, hidden in Equateiy and never seen again, is a loose thread with significant narrative potential.

Solis personally attacked the fleeing ship, took Reasaec's head, and sent it to Gherci with a note written in Ananara: "The head of a rat - do as you please with it." The King of Gherci had Reasaec's head preserved, his mouth forced open, and hung it at the castle entrance.

EMPEROR SOLIS ELIAS PATTON

Emperor Solis Elias Patton

Born a mortal prince of Aicruae, third child of King Benjamin and his concubine Lady Emillea Hige. After the deaths of his father and mother (Lady Emillea was forced to drink poison during his half-siblings' coup), Solis waged a civil war against his older half-siblings Orcus and Iris. He won the war and subsequently conquered the surrounding kingdoms, unifying them into a single empire. Solis died at age 87 with four children. The empire was renamed the "Solisian Empire" by his son Maen after his death.

NOTE: Emperor Solis Elias Patton is NOT the same person as "Soli" - the mortal guise of the twin gods Ekhasostio/Paxtino who appears during A Tale of Three Sisters (approximately 7,200-7,100 BR). These are two completely different individuals from different eras.

SOLI (MORTAL FORM OF EKHASOSTIO/PAXTINO)

Soli (Paxtino/Ekhasostio in Mortal Form)

"Soli" is the mortal guise used by the twin gods Paxtino and Ekhasostio during the events of A Tale of Three Sisters (approximately

7,200 — 7,100BR

, the post-War of Gods II era). In this form, the twins function as a merged entity - two aspects of one being controlling both divine aspects simultaneously. As Soli, they met and formed a relationship with Apharia.

Soli later becomes a teacher figure during Minara's era.

NOTE: "Soli" is NOT the same person as Emperor Solis Elias Patton. The emperor lived during A Tale of a Thousand Songs and was a mortal man. Soli is a god in disguise who appears during the next book's timeline.

(~ 7,250BR)

MOTIVATIONS

Why Not Simple Assassination: After 10,000 years of hatred, quick death would be unsatisfying; she wants the Patton bloodline to watch their empire crumble, to be afraid before they die, to understand loss as she has

Primary Goal: Revenge against the Patton bloodline for:

- Solis killing her father
- Destroying Vikistv and her way of life
- Creating circumstances that killed both her sisters
- Personal guilt: she failed to save Enyokia

Secondary Goal (Renedin's): Destabilize mortal faith in divine protection to weaken the gods, enabling Renedin to break the barrier between realms

The Wound That Never Healed: Enyokia's death. Vandrea chose to run with Apharia instead of immediately rescuing Enyokia. She hesitated, and her hesitation killed her sister. She never forgave herself.
