Status By Era

Pre-Empire Era: Not yet a noble house. For the longest time they were known as "the wandering pirates," voyaging the Quather Sea since the era of Saintess Nairan (~10,012–9,983 BR). They settled in Coelum for access to two bodies of water before migrating to Aicruae around 8,978 BR. Officially recognized as nobles in 8,804 BR.

Solis's Era: Marquess/Marquis. Seated at Port Vento in Aicruae, a property owned by House Arvento but primarily maintained by House Dajanyi. Very influential as the country's heroes, holding the Marquis position.

Crandona's Era: [TBD]

Minara's Era: [TBD]

Why They Matter

House Dajanyi started as pirates. Not metaphorical ones. Not "we have a roguish ancestor" pirates. Actual, ship-raiding, treasure-hoarding, sea-faring pirates who earned the nickname "The Sea Monsters" while terrorizing the waters around Coelum. Their mythological origin traces back to the survivors of the Mirrors of Nimlye, an event that drove an entire crew of pirates to madness and mutual slaughter in a single night.

And then they became nobles.

That transformation, from wanted criminals to one of the most respected houses in Aicruae, is what makes House Dajanyi matter. Rigu Dajanyi survived a cursed treasure haul and built a pirate dynasty. His descendant Xahaner petitioned for noble status and won. Mericani wrote the 60/40 Agreement that turned piracy into a regulated business under Aicruaen law. Hilatoma became a national hero by single-handedly preventing two kingdoms from falling during the War of Fera. And Lunteo beat the king himself in a tournament, catapulting the family from Baron all the way to Marquis.

They are the house that proves you don't need to be born into power. You can take it. You can earn it. You can fight your way from the bottom of the ocean to the top of the social ladder, and if you're good enough, they'll change the definition of your name to match.

Heraldry

The Crest: A shield divided per fess by a sharp zigzag line resembling waves or jagged coastline. The upper field is a soft seafoam green, the lower field cornflower blue. In the upper left sits a golden eight-pointed star with orange-red tips. Dominating the blue lower field is a large sea serpent in blue-green with a green dorsal ridge, coiled in an S-shape, mouth open with yellow eyes and a red tongue showing. Along the right edge of the shield, overlapping the border, a downward-pointing sword with a blue-wrapped grip rests partially outside the field.

Symbolism:

The sea serpent is the family's history wearing its real face. House Dajanyi's spirit animal is listed as a dolphin, a nod to "The Sea Monsters" nickname they earned terrorizing the waters around Coelum. But the creature on this crest isn't a dolphin. It's something older and meaner. Coiled, jaws open, eyes bright. This is what the Dajanyis looked like before they became nobles. This is Rigu Dajanyi surviving the Mirrors of Nimlye while every other pirate on his crew went mad and killed each other. This is generations of sea raiders building a dynasty out of stolen treasure and salt water. The serpent doesn't apologize for what it is. Neither does House Dajanyi.

The zigzag division between the green and blue fields isn't smooth. It cuts across the shield like teeth, like waves breaking against rock, like the jagged coastline the Dajanyis sailed along for centuries before they ever set foot in Aicruae. That line is the border between what the family used to be and what they became. Above the line: the sky, the air, the world of nobility and recognition. Below the line: the sea, the deep, the old pirate blood that still runs through every generation. The Dajanyis crossed that line when Xahaner petitioned for noble status and won. But the line is still there. You can see it. They want you to see it.

The seafoam green upper field represents the sky, growth, and divinity. Green is one of the house's two colors, and for the Dajanyis it carries the weight of their faith. They follow the Order of the Pure Ones, one of only a handful of families in Aicruae to do so and the most prominent among them. The green field is air and prosperity. It's what's above the water. It's where you go when you stop being a pirate and start being a marquis. Lunteo Dajanyi beat the king himself in a tournament and elevated the family from Baron to Marquis. That's the green field. The air up top where the Dajanyis finally got to breathe.

The cornflower blue lower field is the sea. Calmness and endurance. This is the water the Dajanyis have been sailing since the era of Saintess Nairan, roughly 10,000 BR. Over a thousand years on the Quather Sea before they even had a name for themselves. Blue is patience. Blue is the thing beneath everything else, the foundation the family was built on before the titles and the 139,000 Rern and Port Vento. They live at a port owned by House Arvento but maintained by Dajanyi hands. The sea is still theirs even when the land belongs to someone else.

The golden star in the upper field is guidance and divine favor. Navigation. The thing that tells a sailor which way is home. For the Dajanyis, who spent centuries as wanderers before they settled anywhere, the star is the fixed point they sailed toward. It's also the moment the gods smiled on them, if you believe that sort of thing. The Order of the Pure Ones would say the star is proof that the Dajanyis were always meant to be more than pirates. Rigu would probably say it's just a star, and stars don't care what you are.

The sword overlapping the shield's edge is the house name made visible. Dajanyi means "One who carries a sword," a meaning Lunteo changed it to after the original definition, "A traveler," no longer fit a family that had stopped traveling and started conquering. The sword breaks past the border of the shield because House Dajanyi has never stayed inside the lines. They crossed from Coelum to Aicruae. They crossed from piracy to nobility. They crossed from Baron to Marquis by beating the king in single combat. The sword doesn't sit politely inside the crest. It reaches past it. That's the whole family in one detail.

House Colors: Green and Blue. Green for the sky, growth, divinity, and prosperity. Blue for the sea, calmness, and endurance. One color for what's above the water. One for what's below.

Motto: "Forever Lasting." Two words. The shortest motto among the major houses and somehow the most ambitious. Rigu Dajanyi built a pirate crew out of cursed treasure and madness, and his descendants turned it into a noble house that survived into Solis's Era as Marquesses holding the title of national heroes.

"Forever Lasting" isn't a prayer. It's a dare. It says: try to end us. The sea couldn't. The Mirrors of Nimlye couldn't. A thousand years of being called wanderers and pirates and sea monsters couldn't. We were here before you knew our name, and we'll be here after you forget yours.

Mericaní wrote the 60/40 Agreement that turned piracy into regulated business. Hilatoma saved two kingdoms alone during the War of Fera. Lunteo knocked the crown off the king's head in a tournament ring and walked away a Marquis.

"Forever Lasting" is the family looking at all of that and saying: we're not done yet.

Common Sayings About House Dajanyi

[TBD]

History

Mythological Origin

House Dajanyi traces its origins to the myth of the Mirrors of Nimlye. A group of pirates discovered an island full of treasures that happened to house three of the goddess Nimlye's five mirrors, said to reveal the secrets of the world to anyone who looked into them. The pirates thought the mirrors were nothing more than shiny objects, but at nightfall the moonlight hit the glass and every pirate who looked into them went mad. They slaughtered each other. Brother killed brother, friends turned on friends. By morning, the mirrors' light had gone dark. Rigu Dajanyi was among the few who survived that night. (Full myth below.)

Ancient History

House Dajanyi has existed since the time of Saintess Nairan (~10,012–9,983 BR), voyaging the Quather Sea. For the longest time they were referred to as "the wandering pirates."

First Settlement & Coelum Period

Around 9,617 BR, the family first decided on a permanent location. They initially settled in Coelum for access to two bodies of water, earning the nickname "The Sea Monsters." They remained there until Equateiy and Vikistv began taxing Coelum's water, prompting migration to Aicruae around 8,978 BR.

Noble Recognition (8,804 BR)

The royal family of Aicruae officially acknowledged their noble bloodline status in 8,804 BR. Xahaner Dajanyi, the official founder, established that House Dajanyi was more than a family of pirates. He brought attention to the house and cemented the accomplishments of his predecessors.

Rise to Power

Major achievements include Hilatoma Dajanyi's heroism during the War of Fera, Lunteo Dajanyi's victory at the King's Tournament (which elevated the family from Baron to Marquis), and Mericani Dajanyi's 60/40 Agreement that regulated piracy under Aicruaen law.

Notable Members

Listed chronologically, from the house's earliest known ancestor to its most recent notable member.

Rigu Dajanyi (9,741 BR – 9,675 BR)

"Creator of House Dajanyi"

Name meaning: Friend to many

Rigu is the ancestor of House Dajanyi who survived the Night of Blood mentioned in the myth "The Mirrors of Nimlye." He was a skilled thief and pirate and co-captain of the group of pirates that found Nimlye's mirrors. He managed to survive the night with a handful of treasures that he used to create a new crew of pirates run exclusively by his family. He brought the family to Coelum, took Ailimara Kifan as his wife, and settled the family there.

He could have married Sorara Jivaya, but her family didn't approve. Despite this, Ailimara was said to have been the reason behind his every joy and laughter.

Note: Rigu created the house, but Xahaner Dajanyi receives official founder credit as the one who established it as a noble house.

Xahaner Dajanyi (8,830 BR – 8,753 BR)

Official Founder of House Dajanyi

Name meaning: Autumn

Descendant of Rigu. The one who moved the family from Coelum to Aicruae and made the case that they were nobles, not just pirates. He brought attention to the house and cemented his predecessors' accomplishments. Official noble recognition came in 8,804 BR under his leadership.

Mericani Dajanyi (8,827 BR – 8,748 BR)

"The Protector"

Name meaning: Protector

Sister to Xahaner. An accomplished pirate who traveled the world 72 times. She wrote the "60/40 Agreement": pirates protected by Aicruaen laws must give 40% of their loot to the royal family in exchange for protection and access to ships and weapons. She also helped her brother petition to maintain noble status while continuing piracy.

Nauebia Dajanyi (8,712 BR – 8,630 BR)

"The Great Beauty"

Name meaning: Beautiful

Scandalous reputation: rumored to be a prostitute and/or the king's lover. The rumors were likely baseless, created by jealous individuals, but they stuck enough to damage her reputation permanently. She married Aisari Der Dajanyi and had three children.

Hilatoma Dajanyi (8,675 BR – 8,610 BR)

"Aicruae's Great Hero"

Name meaning: Sweetheart

Daughter of Nauebia. The great hero of Aicruae during the War of Fera. She prevented both Aicruae and Coelum from falling to House Mena. She personally carried out the punishment and execution of all involved in the war, including Fransei Mena. She is often compared to Fransei Mena.

Lunteo Dajanyi (7,957 BR – 7,893 BR)

"The Swordsman Who Beat a King"

Name meaning: Moonlight

Unlike his predecessors, Lunteo was famous for his sword skill rather than for voyages. He changed the meaning of the name "Dajanyi" from "A traveler" to "one who carries a sword." He beat the king in a tournament, catapulting House Dajanyi's status from Baron to Marquis.

The Mirrors of Nimlye

The goddess Nimlye had 5 mirrors, said to reveal the secrets of the world to anyone who looked into them. Due to the off-putting nature of the mirrors, Nimlye had to scatter them across the earth. She had hoped that no one would find them ever again.

One day, a group of pirates stumbled across an island engulfed in treasures that happened to house 3 of those mirrors. The pirates, unaware of what the mirrors contained, thought nothing more of them than shiny, glistening objects. But once they brought the mirrors back to their ship and nightfall came, the reflection of the moon hit the mirrors. It caused them to look away from their tasks and stare directly into the glass.

What they saw was said to be so disturbing that they all went mad and killed each other. Brother turned on brother. Friends became foe. And at the end of the night, the light of the mirrors no longer shined.

The location of the remaining two mirrors has yet to be known.

Rigu Dajanyi was among the survivors of this event. The treasures he salvaged from that night became the foundation of the Dajanyi pirate dynasty.
