Why They Matter

The house motto says “A home for those with none,” and the one member we know who eventually lived that motto to the letter. Danik Malrancis was abandoned in the woods at birth and raised by wolves. As an adult, he became the father figure to five young women who wandered into the Caprlolan forest: Ala, Hicksora, Amuseri, Eveli, and Thoati. He hunted for them and protected them, but kept his distance because he saw himself as a monster. He later joined Crandona’s rebellion and was killed by Avromvog Stanyad. His death is one of the story’s most devastating losses. A man who was himself abandoned and homeless built a home for others, and that’s what House Malrancis is supposed to be about.

Heraldry

Crest: Bold vertical stripes alternate between vibrant red and pure white, with a dark brown wolf in a rampant stance at the center. The wolf’s form cuts across the striped background, its mouth open and tail curved.

Symbolism: The wolf represents loyalty, family bonds, and the protective instincts of the pack. The red and white stripes create a sense of order and structure, and also suggest barriers separating the protected from the threatening wilderness beyond. The wolf’s placement over the stripes (rather than confined within a single field) suggests the house’s role as guardians who stand between civilization and chaos, offering sanctuary to the displaced. The brown coloring of the wolf, earthier than the more common black or silver, emphasizes the house’s grounded, practical approach to their duty of providing refuge.

Motto: “A home for those with none.”

Values

Sanctuary and protection for the displaced. The house motto frames their purpose as providing refuge, and Danik's life is the clearest expression of that principle: a man who was himself homeless creating a home for others.

Danik Malrancis (Born 66 BR, DECEASED)

Father of the Forest

A mysterious man abandoned in the woods at birth and raised by wolves. As an adult, he became a father figure to those who wandered into the Caprlolan forest: Ala, Hicksora, Amuseri, Eveli, and Thoati. All five women thought of him as their father. He hunted for them and protected them, but kept his distance because he viewed himself as a monster.

He later joined Crandona's campaign to reclaim the throne. He was killed by Avromvog Sanyad during the rebellion.

The house motto, "A home for those with none," fits Danik with painful precision. He was himself abandoned and homeless, yet he built a home for five young women in the Caprlolan forest.

Cause of Death: Killed by Avromvog Sanyad during Crandona's rebellion.

Strengths & Weaknesses

Known For

Providing sanctuary and protection. The wolf as a house symbol reflects pack loyalty and the guarding of one's own.

Role in Narrative

Book Appearances: Book 3 (A Princess in Love)

Plot Significance: Danik's role as a surrogate father to the forest group gives the rebellion its emotional core. His death at Avromvog's hands is one of the story's most devastating losses and directly motivates Ala's vengeance.
