Why They Matter

House Pontia stands apart from the dysfunction that defines most noble houses in this world. The Pontia clan is described as happy, well-off, and influential, well-known throughout the world. Their ancestral traditions of traveling, spiritual connection to their ancestors, and the trefoil hair ornament all offer a contrast to the broken, power-hungry families surrounding them. Eventually through Amuseri, they become direct allies to Crandona's rebellion, and their presence in the story is proof that not every noble house has to be rotten to be interesting.

Traditions

Trefoil Wire Hair Ornament: A single continuous strand of wire forming three graduated loops (largest at bottom, smallest at top) worn diagonally across the crown of the head and locked into three side-by-side plaits. The three loops represent the three stages of life: childhood (smallest), adulthood (middle), and elderhood (largest). The diagonal cross-brace creates tension and friction across the three plaits, and the inward-turned hook makes it self-locking.

Ancestral Traveling: An ancestral tradition of letting your heart guide you to your perfect destination. Traveling as a rite of passage is the way of the Pontia ancestors.

Spiritual Connection

Deep spiritual connection to ancestors, who communicate with the most connected clan members. Of all the Pontia, Amuseri was the most connected to the ancestors, and they would tell her things sometimes because of that bond.

Amuseri Pontia (Born 19 BR)

Crandona's Ally

Born to the Pontia clan, Amuseri had no reason to leave home. She was simply bored with her life and looking for something fulfilling. She told her family she was running away, but they didn't stop her because they knew there was no stopping Amuseri, and because it was the way of their ancestors: traveling and letting your heart guide you to your perfect destination.

She found her way to the Caprlolan forest and joined the group living under Danik Malrancis's protection. Later, she joined Crandona's campaign to reclaim the throne. She survived the rebellion.

Out of all the members of the Pontia clan, Amuseri was the most connected to the ancestors, and they would tell her things sometimes because of that bond.

She wore a distinctive trefoil wire hair ornament, a Pontia clan tradition: a single continuous strand of wire forming three graduated loops (largest at bottom, smallest at top) worn diagonally across the crown of the head and locked into three side by side plaits. The three loops represent childhood (smallest), adulthood (middle), and elderhood (largest).

Other members of Danik's forest group: Ala, Hicksora, Eveli, and Thoati. All five women thought of Danik as their father.
