Heraldry

Crest: The crest of House Tazem presents a striking simplicity that belies its deeper meaning. Upon a shield divided vertically by a bold brown pale (center stripe), a golden-brown fox leaps gracefully across the division, its body dynamic and alert, tail raised high in cunning confidence. The fox, rendered in profile with careful attention to its pointed ears and slender muzzle, moves from left to right against a white field that dominates both flanks of the shield.

Symbolism: This clever creature, neither monster nor god, but something that survives through wit alone, embodies the house's philosophical question: "Monsters, Gods, or humans?" The fox suggests that House Tazem chooses the middle path, relying on intelligence and adaptability rather than brute force or divine favor, thriving in the spaces between extremes through cunning observation and tactical flexibility.

Motto: "No Monsters, Gods, or humans may harm us for we are the Tazem."
