Why They Matter

House Yurea is a family of merchants and inventors in a world that runs on swords. They have almost no military power, and that's the one thing everyone notices. But what they do have is ideas. Millaursa Yurea created the God's Trial skill tests for every job in the kingdom. She built a matchmaking system that raised the kingdom's birthrate by 90% and earned the royal family's protection through the Aursa Bill. She started a clothing business that's generated over 10,000 Rern since its founding.

Then there's the family itself. Behind the innovations, House Yurea's internal politics are vicious. Variae, the rightful heir, was banished at sixteen by his scheming stepmother Tasiye to protect her own son Denatto's claim. Denatto had Variae's daughter Pyhia imprisoned, her hand cut off, her eyesight destroyed, and finally poisoned at nineteen. He killed Variae with Baseik Fever. And then Denatto's own son Soinis, the boy he locked in a dog cage every night from ages six to ten, poisoned him right back.

By Solis's Era, the house produces Jaifey Yurea, a military genius whose knowledge surpasses even the emperor's. He becomes a kingmaker who can't make his own king, and his daughter Tixsei fills the void left by Esterica's death as the political solution to a personal loss. A merchant family with no army somehow places a queen on the throne. That's House Yurea.

Heraldry

Heraldry

The Crest: A shield-within-shield composition. The outer field is deep forest green, while a secondary escutcheon sits at the center with curved, cloud-like edges in soft periwinkle blue. Rising from a small patch of green ground within the inner shield is a golden beacon: a tall tripod structure of dark metal supporting a brazier from which bright yellow-gold flames leap and curl upward. The fire is stylized with flowing, almost liquid tendrils of flame.

Symbolism: The beacon is the whole identity of House Yurea pressed into a single image. Millaursa Yurea didn't come from nobility. She came from ideas. The God's Trial, the matchmaking system, the clothing store, jobs for women who had nothing. She built a fire where there wasn't one and made people follow the light. The beacon on this crest isn't a memorial. It's a statement. House Yurea believes they are the ones who show everyone else the way forward.

The tripod structure grounds the flame. Three legs holding up the fire. A practical image for a practical family. House Yurea doesn't have an army. They've never had one. What they have is commerce, innovation, and positioning. Three legs. Take one away and the fire falls. But as long as all three hold, the light burns higher than houses twice their size. Jaifey Yurea proved that when he went from merchant's son to General of the Second Army. Tixsei proved it when she went from lady-in-waiting to queen. No soldiers. No territory worth fighting over. And still, they put a crown on one of their own.

The green field is hope and growth. That's what the house was built on. Millaursa believed in the future so hard she designed systems to shape it. The God's Trial didn't just test skills. It told people what they were good at and gave them a direction. The matchmaking system didn't just raise the birthrate by 90%. It gave young people a choice outside arranged marriage. Green is the color of something still growing, still becoming. House Yurea has never stopped becoming.

The periwinkle blue inner shield is constancy. The steady sky the light reaches toward. Blue is the thing underneath the ambition. It's Soinis, locked in a dog cage from ages six to ten, enduring it because someone had to protect his mother and siblings. It's Variae, banished at sixteen, coming back anyway because the family was still his. But constancy cuts both ways in this house. Denatto was constant. Tasiye was constant. The cruelty inside House Yurea has been just as steady as the loyalty, and the blue holds both.

The golden flames are glory and guidance, but they're also the danger of believing your own story. House Yurea calls themselves the light. They believe they're destined for greatness. And in many ways they've earned it. But the beacon burns in every direction. Denatto believed he was destined too. He murdered his brother and his niece and sat on the family seat for a few months before his own son poisoned him right back. The flame doesn't care who it burns. It just burns. House Yurea's greatest strength and their greatest blind spot have always been the same thing: they think the fire exists to guide others. Sometimes the fire just exists.

House Colors: Green and Gold. Green for hope, growth, and the living world. Gold for glory, guidance, and the belief that House Yurea was made to lead.

Motto: "Lighting the Path." The motto does exactly what House Yurea always does. It sounds humble and it isn't. "Lighting the Path" positions the family as guides, as servants of a greater good. Millaursa meant it that way. She genuinely believed the systems she built helped people. But the motto carries a quieter arrogance too. If you're the one holding the torch, you're the one deciding which direction everyone walks. House Yurea has always been better at leading than they are at admitting they want to. A merchant family with no army that put a queen on the throne didn't get there by accident. They got there because they've been lighting the path for centuries, and by now, everyone just follows.

Common Sayings About House Yurea

History

Founding (8,209 BR)

Millaursa Yurea founded the house with a habit of creating things never done before. She designed the God's Trial, a system of skill tests for every job in Aicruae. She made jobs for local women in sewing and stitching through the Yurea Clothing Store. She created a matchmaking system for young couples seeking alternatives to arranged marriages (though nobility largely preferred arranged marriages). The King loved this system because it helped him find his wife, and he protected it with the Aursa Bill. After the kingdom's birthrate rose by 90%, Millaursa was bestowed with nobility.

Rise to Power

[TBD]

Major Achievements

God's Trial: Skill tests designed for every job in the kingdom.

The Aursa Bill: A protected matchmaking system that raised the kingdom's birthrate by 90%.

Yurea Clothing Store: The family business, generating over 10,000 Rern since opening.

Major Disgraces

Denatto Yurea's murder of his half-brother Variiae and his niece Pyhia shocked high society. Pyhia was imprisoned, had her hand cut off on her father's orders (forced by Denatto), lost her eyesight from torture, and was poisoned at 19. Variiae was exposed to Baseik Fever by his stepmother Tasiye and half-brother Denatto, dying two years after Pyhia. Denatto became known as "the great demon" for these killings.

Notable Members

Listed chronologically, from the house's origins to its current generation.

Millaursa Yurea (8,255 BR – 8,142 BR)

Founder of House Yurea

Name meaning: Protector of Life

Millaursa had a habit of creating things never done before. She designed the God's Trial skill tests for every job in Aicruae. She made jobs for local women through the Yurea Clothing Store, providing work in sewing and stitching. She created a matchmaking system for young couples who wanted alternatives to arranged marriages, though nobility largely preferred the traditional route. The King loved this system (it helped him find his wife) and protected it with the Aursa Bill after the kingdom's birthrate rose by 90%. She was bestowed nobility as a result.

Euonia Yurea (8,170 BR – 8,102 BR)

"Aursa Reincarnated"

Name meaning: Mighty

A Der (distant relative) brought into the main family by her uncle, who believed she resembled his mother Millaursa and would lead the family into a golden age. She earned the nickname "Aursa reincarnated" for being as smart and calculating as her grandmother. Her becoming heir was controversial: her uncle had two potential male heirs, and she wasn't part of the main family. She became the first female matriarch since Millaursa, roughly 70 years after the founder's leadership. Euonia expanded the clothing store and opened business with Gherci.

Maren Yurea

Father of Variae and Denatto

Described as "gentle." Maren's first wife produced Variae, the legitimate heir. His second wife, Tasiye, produced Denatto. Maren's gentleness allowed Tasiye's scheming to go unchecked, with devastating consequences for the family.

Tasiye Yurea

Maren's Second Wife | Mother of Denatto

A scheming woman who saw her stepson Variae as a threat to her son Denatto's claim. She orchestrated Variae's banishment when he was 16 and later conspired with Denatto to expose Variae to Baseik Fever. Poisoned by her own grandson Soinis alongside Denatto.

Variae Yurea (8,041 BR – 7,961 BR)

Name meaning: The Variation of Me/Someone

The firstborn son from Maren's first wife, making him the legitimate heir. Banished at age 16 because his stepmother Tasiye saw him as a threat to Denatto's claim.

He fled to Equateiy and lived with House Toallu, where he fell in love with Rlyana Toallu. When Rlyana became pregnant, she abandoned both him and their child Pyhia. Variae later returned home but lost his daughter to his half-brother's scheming. He died of Baseik Fever (exposed to it by Tasiye and Denatto) two years after Pyhia's death, unable to get revenge.

Denatto Yurea (8,037 BR – 7,961 BR)

"The Great Demon"

Name meaning: One's True Love / Loving Child

Son of Maren Yurea and his second wife Tasiye. Grew up spoiled due to his scheming mother and gentle father. Had a sadistic habit of teasing his brother Variae. Called "the great demon" for killing his half-brother and niece in a way that shocked high society. He had Pyhia imprisoned, forced Variae to cut off her hand, and ordered her poisoning at 19. He became heir after their deaths but only ruled for a few months before being poisoned by his own son Soinis alongside his mother Tasiye.

Pyhia Yurea (7,982 BR – 7,963 BR)

Name meaning: My Happiness

Born in Equateiy to Lady Rlyana Toallu and Variae Yurea. Her mother gave her to Variae, viewing her as a disgrace to Toallu family honor. Raised as a poor person until age 13, when her grandfather died and both she and Variae were allowed to return to the Yurea family. Treated poorly upon return. Denatto had her imprisoned, forced her father to cut off her hand, and she lost her eyesight from torture during imprisonment. Extremely isolated from high society. Poisoned at age 19 on her half-uncle's orders.

Soinis Yurea (7,980 BR – 7,927 BR)

Name meaning: Lover of Battle

Eldest male heir of Denatto, supposedly his prized and well-favored son. In reality, Denatto was abusive to everyone, especially Soinis. He locked Soinis in a dog cage every night from ages 6 to 10. Soinis endured it, often defending his mother and siblings. He grew close to his cousin Pyhia, viewing her as a sister. At 17, he learned of Pyhia's murder. His mother pressured him not to fight his father. At 19, after learning his uncle Variae had died, Soinis poisoned his father Denatto and grandmother Tasiye, exposed his father's crimes, and became heir.

Jaifey Yurea

General of the Second Army

A soldier from Gherci, (not a notable member of the Aicruae branch but of the distant Gherci branch of Yurea) and military genius whose knowledge even surpasses Solis's. Becomes close with Solis, training together and discussing military strategies (causing Mihel to question his position). Appointed General of the Second Army. His ambition becomes apparent when he presents his daughter Tixsei as a potential lady-in-waiting to Esterica. Leads a campaign to recapture Nyeo successfully. Co-architect of the Maeret Orana torture program. Pushes for the decapitation play at sea. Despite his power, he is blocked when Solis declares Maen heir. "A kingmaker who can't make his own king."

Tixsei Yurea

Jaifey's Daughter | Queen

Introduced as her father's gambit. Presented as a potential lady-in-waiting to Esterica. Grows close to Solis during Esterica's forced absence, embodying the threat in Esterica's nightmares. After Esterica's death (poisoned by Haruna after birthing Coyre), Tixsei becomes queen. "The political solution to a personal void."

Strengths & Weaknesses

Known For

Innovation, political maneuvering, merchant wealth, and the ability to place themselves near power without commanding armies. The God's Trial, the Aursa Bill, and the Yurea Clothing Store all show a house that builds influence through ideas and commerce. By Solis's Era, they produce a military genius and a queen.

What They Lack

Military strength. It's the only real thing they lack, and it's the most dangerous thing to lack in Aicruae.

Vulnerabilities

Plot Significance: Jaifey rises to become General of the Second Army and positions his daughter Tixsei as a political player at court. Jaifey is also co-architect of the Maeret Orana torture program and pushes for the decapitation play at sea. His ambitions are ultimately checked when Solis declares Maen heir.

Key Members in Story: Jaifey Yurea (General of the Second Army, kingmaker), Tixsei Yurea (lady-in-waiting turned queen).
