THE WORLD WITHOUT GOD UNIVERSE— MASTER TIMELINE

- Event: Creation of The Magic Tower Location: Right side of Mount Aicren, at a lower standing than the capital city of Vikitsv Key Figures: Descendants of Verna Significance: The Magic Tower was created by the descendants of Verna in 7,749 BR. Over the years the magic tower has become a vital piece of Vikitsv holding all the country's power. It was created in such a way because it makes it so whoever wants to enter the city has to go past the tower first. The tower was first under the control of a powerful magician named Ulian and his sons Kiear and Liaerto III but it has passed down from generation to generation of fathers to their sons. The current Grand Sorceer is the child of Ulian's son Kiear. Book Reference: [TBD]

WAR OF THE GODS I
(~ 30,000BR)

ORIGINS

In the beginning, there were four gods-brothers born of the same song: Mikani (war and order), Poaranji (strength and sailors), Renedin (dreams and the eternal plane), and Haxenylian (protection and wisdom).

The war began when Haxenylian, the third brother, fell in love with a mortal woman named Lady Gaialana. Their union produced Vapaz and Zopha-the first New Gods. This was a concept unimaginable before their birth; around this time, mortal beliefs were also shifting, and with this change, new gods came into existence.

The Old Gods, especially Mikani, detested this. He turned Poaranji and Renedin against Haxenylian.

THE SPARK

War officially began when Renedin murdered Lady Gaialana, trapping her in an eternal dream where she forgot to wake. Her body simply stopped breathing. The Old Gods then made plans to murder Haxenylian's children and the newer gods as well.

Haxenylian allied with minor Old Gods, most notably Loart, to defend his children and the New Gods.

THE OUTCOME

The New Gods won the war, but both Loart and Haxenylian died as casualties.

- Vapaz defeated Mikani through sheer unwillingness to die
- Zopha defeated Poaranji (drowned by her grief)
- Renedin survived but was later imprisoned in the Garden of Unspoken Names

Vapaz became King of the Gods-the first to ever hold such a title.

- Event: Creation of the Sun-Forged Mortals Location: Worldwide Key Figures: None specific ordinary humanity Significance: In contrast to the god-touched Sky and Mountain folk, entirely mortal humans known as the "Sun Forged" thrived without divine lineage. Over millennia, the Sun-Forged spread across the world and laid the foundations of mortal civilizations. By the time of the Saints, humankind had established itself globally, worshipping the gods and subject to the mythic events of earlier ages. The Sun-Forged represent the baseline of humanity - untainted by godly blood, yet no less capable of building kingdoms and shaping history. Book Reference: [TBD]
[8,900 BR —7, 945BR]
—Event: The Warriors' Age Location: Worldwide (primarily the founding regions of all major kingdoms) Key Figures: Yemaser of House Kivier (Equateiy), Saint Duri (Gherci), Haliour Layern Patton I (Aicruae), Yuavekio the Wise (Coelum), Verna (Vikitsv) Significance: A period of roughly a thousand years when the majority of the world's kingdoms were founded. Referred to as the Warriors' Age because of the sheer volume of wars fought during this time, though it is important to note that most conflicts were internal disputes - clashes between rival clans, warlords, and factions vying for control within newly forming nations rather than wars between established countries. Equateiy (8,900 BR), Gherci (8,763 BR), Aicruae (8,759 BR), and Coelum (8,494 BR) were all founded during this era. Pireaynea was the only country not founded during the Warriors' Age. The era's conclusion roughly coincides with the founding of Vikitsv (7,945 BR). Book Reference: [TBD]
[8,759 BR]
- Event: Founding of House Patton / Kingdom of Aicruae Location: Aicruae - capital city of Lajazer, built atop a sheer mountain cliff Key Figures: King Haliour Layern Patton I Significance: During the height of the Warriors' Age, the warlord Haliour Layern Patton I seized control of the fertile land of Aicruae and declared himself king. Two weeks after uniting the local clans by force, he formally established House Patton as the royal house of Aicruae. Haliour I chose the site for his capital based on a prophetic dream — he built the city of Lajazer atop a sheer mountain cliff, making it virtually impregnable and a symbol of the Patton kings' authority. His rule inaugurated an unbroken Patton dynasty that lasted nearly two millennia. The founding of House Patton replaced the patchwork of chieftains with a centralized monarchy. Book Reference: [TBD]
[8,746 BR]
-Event: Founding of House Arvento Location: Aicruae Key Figures: Lenkitta Arvento, King Haliour Layern Patton I Significance: Established just thirteen years after House Patton's rise, House Arvento became the second-oldest noble house in Aicruae. Its founder, Lenkitta Arvento, was a close friend and ally of King Haliour I. This personal friendship formed the basis of a lasting political alliance: House Arvento swore loyalty to the Patton kings in exchange for lands and status. Over time, House Arvento gained renown for scholarship and law, with their scholars becoming trusted advisors to the crown. Arvento remained neutral in inter-house conflicts and steadfastly loyal to the royal family - a bond that helped Aicruae weather many crises and set the stage for the kingdom's stability. CONTEXT

- What Led to This: House Baliva's forces threatened the coastal town of Aishae, likely as part of Baliva's territorial expansion in the northern theater. Political Climate: The Warriors' Age - noble houses were still consolidating power and competing for regional dominance within Aicruae. Key Tensions: House Arvento vs. House Baliva; competition for maritime and territorial control in the north.

PARTICIPANTS

KEY FIGURES INVOLVED

- [Arvento Commander - Name TBD]: Led the defense of Aishae [Baliva Commander - Name TBD]: Led the assault

WHAT HAPPENED

- Summary: House Baliva's forces threatened the coastal town of Aishae. House Arvento's troops heroically defended the town and, following the victory, constructed a port at Aishae as a forward base. Phase 1: Baliva's forces advance on Aishae. Phase 2: Arvento mounts a successful defense of the town. Phase 3: Following the battle, Arvento constructs a port at Aishae. Turning Point: Arvento's successful defense repels Baliva's assault. Resolution: Aishae secured; port construction begins.

CASUALTIES & LOSSES

- Deaths (Notable): [TBD] Deaths (Numbers): [TBD] Other Losses: House Baliva loses its foothold on the coast.

OUTCOME

- Victor: House Arvento Terms/Results: Arvento gains control of Aishae and builds a new port there. Immediate Consequences: House Arvento gains maritime dominance in the northern region. The new port becomes a thriving harbor, boosting both trade and naval strength.

LONG-TERM IMPACT

- Political Changes: Marks Arvento's evolution from loyal counselors and scholars to a true military power. The port at Aishae becomes a strategic asset. Social Changes: Growth of a maritime economy around Aishae. How History Remembers It: As the moment House Arvento became a military force, not just an intellectual one. Commemorations: [TBD]

ROLE IN NARRATIVE

- Book/Chapter: [TBD] POV Character(s): [TBD] Significance to Plot: Seeds the rivalry between House Arvento and House Baliva that eventually explodes into the War of World's End. Scenes Set During: [TBD]

NOTES

- Arvento's expanding influence at sea and on land sows the seeds of rivalry with House Baliva, whose territorial ambitions clash with Arvento's growing presence. This battle is an early domino in the chain that leads to the War of World's End.
[8,683 BR]

- Event: Enactment of the Infant Laws Location: Aicruae (territories under House Arvento's influence) Key Figures: House Arvento Significance: Building on the momentum of the Arvento Code, House Arvento introduced a set of humanitarian laws known as the Infant Laws. These decrees guaranteed protection for infants and mothers regardless of social class. Even children born out of wedlock or in serfdom were entitled to care and safety. The Infant Laws represented one of the earliest codified humanitarian protections in Aicruae's history and further cemented House Arvento's reputation as champions of law and justice. Book Reference: [TBD]

BASIC INFORMATION

- Event Name: The Massacre of Light Date: 8,558 BR Location: Aicruae (likely centered in or near the capital) Duration: [TBD - possibly days to weeks] Type: Religious Purge / Mass Killing

CONTEXT

- What Led to This: The Order of the Pure Ones, a religious sect preaching strict spiritual purity and a moral code, had grown influential enough to threaten royal authority. King Viake viewed their expanding power as a direct challenge to the crown. Political Climate: A period of religious tension within Aicruae. The Pure Ones' doctrine attracted followers across social classes, and their moral authority rivaled that of the established religious institutions loyal to the throne. Key Tensions: Crown vs. religious movement; royal paranoia vs. spiritual independence.

PARTICIPANTS

—Side A: Leader: King Viake Recreation Patton Forces: Royal army / crown forces Allies: Queen Mari Patton (his queen)

Side B: Leader: The Order of the Pure Ones (no single military leader - a civilian religious group)

Forces: 90,000 followers - men, women, and children Allies: None (caught unprepared)

Neutral Parties/Observers: Other noble houses, foreign kingdoms watching in horror

KEY FIGURES INVOLVED

- King Viake Recreation Patton: Ordered and perpetrated the massacre out of paranoia and fanaticism. Queen Mari Patton: Complicit in the purge alongside her husband.

WHAT HAPPENED

- Summary: King Viake's forces slaughtered 90,000 followers of the Order of the Pure Ones in a brutal purge. The victims - men, women, and children devoted to a doctrine of spiritual purity - were killed for no reason other than royal paranoia and fanaticism. Phase 1: The Order of the Pure Ones grows in influence, attracting followers who challenge traditional church and crown authority. Phase 2: King Viake and Queen Mari decide the sect must be destroyed. Phase 3: Royal forces carry out the massacre, killing 90,000 followers. Turning Point: There was no battle - this was a one-sided slaughter of civilians. Resolution: The Order is decimated. Survivors go into hiding.

CASUALTIES & LOSSES

- Deaths (Notable): [TBD - likely sect leaders] Deaths (Numbers): 90,000 followers of the Pure Ones killed Other Losses: The Order's public presence is destroyed; temples and texts presumably burned.

OUTCOME

- Victor: The crown, militarily. Morally, no one. Terms/Results: The Order of the Pure Ones is driven underground. Immediate Consequences: King Viake's name is forever stained. The remaining Pure Ones go into hiding and their teachings survive only in secret.

LONG-TERM IMPACT

- Political Changes: Sets a precedent for royal violence against religious movements. Temporarily consolidates crown authority over spiritual matters. Social Changes: The Pure Ones' ideals survive underground and quietly rebuild a following among high society over the next several centuries. By 8,094BR, dozens of high-born individuals secretly follow the creed - proving the massacre failed to destroy the movement's appeal. How History Remembers It: As one of Aicruae's darkest episodes. Named "The Massacre of Light" because it extinguished so many lives of the "enlightened." Commemorations: [TBD]

ROLE IN NARRATIVE

- Book/Chapter: [TBD] POV Character(s): [TBD] Significance to Plot: Demonstrates that royal power and religious fervor can produce atrocity. The Pure Ones' survival underground feeds into later events like the Taguar Murders. Scenes Set During: [TBD]

NOTES

- Event: The Rise / Revival of the Order of the Pure Ones Location: Aicruae (primarily among noble courts and high society) Key Figures: [No specific named leaders recorded] Significance: Despite the Massacre of Light, the ideals of the Order of the Pure Ones continued to attract adherents - especially among disillusioned nobles. Whispers of the Pure Ones' strict, puritanical teachings spread through royal courts. The Order steadily regained influence after 8,558BR, rebuilding in secret. By 8,094BR, its clandestine popularity among nobles was significant enough that dozens of high-born individuals secretly followed the creed. This growing influence alarmed established powers and set the stage for the Taguar Murders. The revival demonstrates the resilience of religious conviction - even royal bloodshed could not fully extinguish it. Book Reference: [TBD]

THE BATTLE OF LITTLE HILL (8,264 BR)

BASIC INFORMATION

- Event Name: The Battle of Little Hill Date: 8,264 BR Location: [TBD - likely rural Aicruae] Duration: [TBD] Type: Peasant Uprising / Class Conflict

CONTEXT

— What Led to This: A servant named Yujari, pregnant with her second child by her abusive master Hafen, conspired with her older brother Taverlo to poison Hafen. Hafen was a wealthy merchant notorious for beating, punching, and pouring hot water on his servants. When Yujari told Taverlo that Hafen planned to force yet another pregnancy on her after she gave birth, the siblings poisoned Hafen's drink and claimed he died of a fit of rage. However, Hafen's half-brother Saut inherited the business and, suspecting Yujari, had her and her child burned at the stake while she was still pregnant with her second child. Yujari survived the execution and, consumed by fury, banded together with local peasants to wage war against the upper class. Political Climate: Simmering class resentment. The cruelty of wealthy merchants toward servants was normalized, and Yujari's story became a rallying point for the poor. Key Tensions: Peasant class vs. wealthy merchant class; survival vs. oppression.

PARTICIPANTS

—Side A: Leader: Taverlo (Yujari's older brother) Forces: Local peasants, disaffected servants Allies: Yujari (co-instigator)

Side B: Leader: [Local nobility / merchant class - names TBD] Forces: High society members and their retainers Allies: [TBD]

Neutral Parties/Observers: [TBD]

KEY FIGURES INVOLVED

- Yujari: Servant girl, mother, survivor of execution by burning. Her suffering and survival sparked the conflict. Taverlo: Yujari's older brother. Co-conspirator in Hafen's poisoning; led the peasant uprising. Hafen: Wealthy merchant whose cruelty toward servants - and whose death - set the entire chain of events in motion. Saut: Hafen's half-brother who inherited the business and ordered Yujari burned at the stake, escalating the conflict from a poisoning into a war.

WHAT HAPPENED

- Summary: After Yujari survived being burned at the stake, she and Taverlo rallied local peasants and killed Saut. But they didn't stop there - the uprising expanded into open conflict against other high society members. Phase 1: Yujari and Taverlo poison Hafen. They escape suspicion initially. Phase 2: Saut inherits, suspects Yujari, and has her burned at the stake while pregnant. Phase 3: Yujari survives. She and Taverlo band together with peasants, kill Saut, and turn their rage on the wider merchant/noble class. Phase 4: The uprising escalates into the Battle of Little Hill. Turning Point: Yujari's survival of the execution - it transforms a personal vendetta into a class uprising. Resolution: [TBD - the battle's direct outcome is unclear, but Taverlo survives to fight the Battle of Bears two years later]

CASUALTIES & LOSSES

—Deaths (Notable): Hafen (poisoned), Saut (killed by rebels), Yujari's child (burned) Deaths (Numbers): [TBD] Other Losses: Several high society members killed during the uprising.

OUTCOME

- Victor: [TBD - inconclusive or partial rebel success, since Taverlo continues fighting] Terms/Results: The uprising is not fully suppressed; Taverlo regroups for a second conflict. Immediate Consequences: Leads directly to the Battle of Bears two years later.

LONG-TERM IMPACT

- Political Changes: Along with the Battle of Bears and Bloody Winter (five years later), begins a pattern of lower-class uprisings against nobility. Social Changes: Demonstrates that peasant rage can translate into organized violence against the ruling class. How History Remembers It: As the first spark in a chain of class conflicts (Little Hill → Bears → Bloody Winter → eventually the Siege of Highwater). Commemorations: [TBD]

ROLE IN NARRATIVE

- Book/Chapter: [TBD] POV Character(s): [TBD] Significance to Plot: [TBD] Scenes Set During: [TBD]

NOTES

KEY FIGURES INVOLVED

- Taverlo: Led the second uprising. Betrayed by his best friend. [Taverlo's Best Friend - Name TBD]: Betrayed Taverlo, leading to the rebel defeat.

WHAT HAPPENED

- Summary: Taverlo launched a second war against the nobility but was betrayed by his best friend, leading to his defeat. Phase 1: Taverlo regroups after Little Hill and plans a second campaign. Phase 2: The battle is fought. Phase 3: Taverlo's best friend betrays him to the enemy. Turning Point: The betrayal. Resolution: Taverlo loses the battle.

CASUALTIES & LOSSES

- Deaths (Notable): [TBD - Taverlo's fate unclear; likely captured or killed] Deaths (Numbers): [TBD] Other Losses: The peasant uprising collapses.

OUTCOME

- Victor: Noble forces Terms/Results: The rebellion is crushed through betrayal rather than superior force. Immediate Consequences: The uprising ends, but the class resentment it exposed does not. Within five years, Bloody Winter erupts.

LONG-TERM IMPACT

- Political Changes: The rebellion fails, but the underlying tensions persist and worsen. Social Changes: The betrayal adds a layer of tragedy to the lower-class narrative - even among their own, unity is fragile. How History Remembers It: Named "The Battle of Bears" because of the bear's link to brotherhood and family. The name is a bitter irony - it hints that Taverlo was fighting his own "brother" (his best friend) who had been corrupted by the nobles. The bear symbolism turns the story from a simple military defeat into a tragedy about loyalty destroyed. Commemorations: [TBD]

ROLE IN NARRATIVE

- Book/Chapter: [TBD] POV Character(s): [TBD] Significance to Plot: [TBD] Scenes Set During: [TBD]

NOTES

- The Battle of Little Hill and the Battle of Bears are a paired set - two battles caused by the same chain of events within a span of two years (8,264 – 8,262BR). Together with Bloody Winter (8,259 BR), they form a trilogy of class uprisings that foreshadow the much larger Siege of Highwater centuries later.

BLOODY WINTER (8,259 BR)

BASIC INFORMATION

- Event Name: Bloody Winter Date: 8,259 BR Location: Aicruae (likely centered in or near the capital and noble estates) Duration: A few months (winter season) Type: Coup / Popular Uprising

CONTEXT

- What Led to This: Occurred three years after the Battle of Little Hill and Battle of Bears. Nobles flaunted their wealth while the poor starved and died - a "let them eat cake" situation. The class resentment that had fueled the previous uprisings reached a boiling point. Political Climate: Deep inequality between the noble class and the common people. The recent battles had demonstrated that peasants were willing to fight, and the grievances had not been addressed. Key Tensions: Extreme wealth disparity; noble arrogance vs. peasant desperation.

PARTICIPANTS

- Side A: Leader: [Peasant leaders - names TBD] Forces: Starving peasants, lower-class citizens Allies: [TBD]

Side B: Leader: The royal family / Aicruae's nobility Forces: Noble retainers, royal guards Allies: [TBD]

Neutral Parties/Observers: [TBD]

KEY FIGURES INVOLVED

- [Specific leaders TBD]

WHAT HAPPENED

- Summary: The first successful coup against the royal family of Aicruae. Peasants attacked nobles during winter, kicked them out of their homes, and essentially told them to go freeze to death. Phase 1: Nobles parade their wealth while the poor starve through a harsh winter. Phase 2: Peasants revolt attacking nobles, seizing their homes, expelling them into the cold. Phase 3: The coup temporarily succeeds. The royal family is displaced and noble authority collapses for months. Phase 4: The group responsible is eventually caught and hanged. Turning Point: The moment the peasants successfully forced nobles from their own estates - proving the ruling class was not untouchable. Resolution: The rebellion is suppressed and its leaders executed, but the damage is done.

CASUALTIES & LOSSES

- Deaths (Notable): Many relatives of the royal family; many lesser nobles Deaths (Numbers): Over 3,000 killed Other Losses: Noble estates seized (temporarily); royal authority shattered for months.

OUTCOME

- Victor: Technically the crown (the rebels are caught and hanged), but the monarchy suffers a permanent wound. Terms/Results: Rebels executed. Noble property restored. But the precedent is set. Immediate Consequences: The notion that the royal family is untouchable is destroyed forever.

LONG-TERM IMPACT

- Political Changes: Sets the idea that the crown can be challenged - and succeeded against, even temporarily. This becomes the seed that grows into the Siege of Highwater centuries later. Social Changes: A permanent bitterness takes root among the lower class. The memory of Bloody Winter becomes a rallying point for future uprisings. The sense that "if they could do it once, it can be done again" never fades. How History Remembers It: As the first successful coup of the Aicruan royal family, and the event that proved the nobility was not untouchable. A turning point in class relations. Commemorations: [TBD]

ROLE IN NARRATIVE

- Book/Chapter: [TBD] POV Character(s): [TBD] Significance to Plot: The spiritual ancestor of the Siege of Highwater. Any character discussing revolution or class struggle in the story's present would know this name. Scenes Set During: [TBD]

NOTES

- Bloody Winter is the culmination of the Little Hill → Bears → Winter trilogy. Unlike those battles, which were rural and led by specific individuals, Bloody Winter was urban, widespread, and leaderless enough to feel like a genuine popular uprising. The fact that it only lasted months but killed 3,000+ people speaks to its intensity.

THE BATTLE OF SUMMERS (~ 8, 250BR)

BASIC INFORMATION

- Event Name: The Battle of Summers Date: ~ 8, 250 BR (roughly the late 8,200 s BR) Location: Aicruae (central region, likely) Duration: [TBD] Type: Noble Rebellion / Civil War

CONTEXT

- What Led to This: A coalition of disaffected noble houses challenged Aicruae's crown. The recent class uprisings (Little Hill, Bears, Bloody Winter) may have emboldened noble factions who saw the monarchy as weakened. Political Climate: The crown was dealing with both lower-class unrest and noble dissatisfaction simultaneously - a period of deep internal instability. Key Tensions: Rebel noble houses vs. the royal family; internal power struggle for control of Aicruae.

PARTICIPANTS

—Side A (Royalist): Leader: The King [Name TBD] Forces: Royal army Allies: House Vika Side B (Rebel): Leader: [Coalition of rebel noble houses - specific names TBD] Forces: Allied rebel lords and their retainers Allies: [TBD]

Neutral Parties/Observers: [TBD]

KEY FIGURES INVOLVED

— [Vika Commander — Name TBD]: Led House Vika's forces in support of the crown.

WHAT HAPPENED

- Summary: A coalition of rebel noble houses challenged the crown during the height of summer. The royalist forces, significantly bolstered by the loyalist House Vika, prevailed. Phase 1: Rebel coalition forms and challenges the crown. Phase 2: Fierce fighting during summer. Phase 3: House Vika's forces tip the balance in the royalists' favor. Turning Point: House Vika's decisive support for the crown. Resolution: Royalist victory. Several rival noble lineages eliminated.

CASUALTIES & LOSSES

- Deaths (Notable): [TBD - several rebel lords likely killed] Deaths (Numbers): [TBD] Other Losses: Several rival noble lineages destroyed.

OUTCOME

—Victor: Royalist forces / House Patton Terms/Results: The King rewards House Vika with lands and recognition for their loyalty. Immediate Consequences: Strengthens the monarchy's hold on central Aicruae. Eliminates several rival noble houses. House Vika's rise in prominence begins.

LONG-TERM IMPACT

- Political Changes: Paves the way for House Vika's growing influence and their eventual position as one of Aicruae's most powerful houses. Allows the crown to refocus on external threats rather than internal dissent. Social Changes: The elimination of rebel lineages consolidates power among fewer, more loyal houses. How History Remembers It: As the battle that launched House Vika's ascent and proved that loyalty to the crown pays. Commemorations: [TBD]

ROLE IN NARRATIVE

—Book/Chapter: [TBD] POV Character(s): [TBD] Significance to Plot: Origin point of House Vika's political power — any scene dealing with Vika's influence traces back here. Scenes Set During: [TBD] NOTES

- This battle and the Battle of Rivers Point (same year) are a paired set that establishes the Patton-Vika alliance as the dominant political force in Aicruae.

THE BATTLE OF RIVERS POINT (8,248 BR)

BASIC INFORMATION

- Event Name: The Battle of Rivers Point Date: 8,248 BR Location: River's Point - a crucial trade artery / river crossing in Aicruae Duration: [TBD] Type: Trade Route Defense / Rebellion Suppression

CONTEXT

- What Led to This: Rebel factions attempted to seize the river crossing that served as the lifeline of Aicruae's inland commerce. Control of River's Point meant control of the kingdom's economy. Political Climate: Continued instability following the Battle of Summers. Rebel elements still active despite the royalist victory. Key Tensions: Control of trade routes; economic power as a weapon of war.

PARTICIPANTS

- Side A (Royalist): Leader: House Patton (the royal family) Forces: Royal army Allies: House Vika Side B (Rebel): Leader: [Rebel faction leaders — names TBD] Forces: Rebel forces Allies: [TBD] Neutral Parties/Observers: [TBD]

KEY FIGURES INVOLVED

- [TBD]

WHAT HAPPENED

- Summary: Rebel factions attempted to seize the river crossing at River's Point. House Patton and House Vika joined forces to defend the route and won a decisive victory, crushing the rebels and securing Aicruae's economic dominance over inland trade. Phase 1: Rebels move to seize River's Point.

Phase 2: Patton and Vika combine forces to defend the crossing. Phase 3: Decisive royalist victory. Turning Point: The combined Patton-Vika force proves overwhelming. Resolution: Rebels crushed. Trade route secured.

CASUALTIES & LOSSES

- Deaths (Notable): [TBD] Deaths (Numbers): [TBD] Other Losses: Rebel movement effectively broken.

OUTCOME

—Victor: House Patton and House Vika Terms/Results: River commerce flows unimpeded under royal protection. Immediate Consequences: Secures Aicruae's economic dominance over inland trade. Coffers fill. The kingdom is well-positioned to expand its influence.

LONG-TERM IMPACT

- Political Changes: Further solidifies the Patton-Vika alliance as the backbone of Aicruan power. Social Changes: Economic stability returns to the inland regions. How History Remembers It: River's Point becomes synonymous with the Patton-Vika partnership and the notion that economic power is as vital as military might. Commemorations: [TBD]

ROLE IN NARRATIVE

- Book/Chapter: [TBD] POV Character(s): [TBD] Significance to Plot: Cements the idea that the Patton-Vika alliance isn't just military - it's economic. Whoever controls the river controls the kingdom. Scenes Set During: [TBD]

NOTES

- Paired with the Battle of Summers as the two events that establish the Patton-Vika alliance as Aicruae's defining political partnership.

BASIC INFORMATION

- Event Name: The Battle of GreyNest Date: 8,248 BR (same year as / a couple months before the Treaty of Oahiat) Location: GreyNest - a strategic fortress town in Aicruae Duration: [TBD] Type: Civil War / Noble Rebellion

CONTEXT

- What Led to This: Part of the broader internal instability plaguing Aicruae during this period. Rebel nobles challenged the crown's authority at GreyNest. Political Climate: The same turbulent environment as the Battles of Summers and Rivers Point. Diplomacy and war were happening simultaneously - the Treaty of Oahiat was being negotiated even as GreyNest was fought. Key Tensions: Royal authority vs. rebel nobles; the parallel tracks of warfare and diplomacy.

PARTICIPANTS

—Side A: Leader: Aicruae's royal army [Commander TBD] Forces: Royal forces Allies: [TBD]

Side B: Leader: Coalition of rebel nobles [Names TBD] Forces: Rebel noble forces Allies: [TBD]

Neutral Parties/Observers: [TBD]

KEY FIGURES INVOLVED

- [Specific commanders TBD - surviving records are sparse]

WHAT HAPPENED

- Summary: Forces clashed at GreyNest, a strategic fortress town. The battle was notable for its high casualties and indecisive outcome. Phase 1: Rebel nobles move against GreyNest. Phase 2: Royal army engages. Phase 3: Heavy fighting with no clear victor. Turning Point: None - the battle was indecisive. Resolution: No definitive winner recorded.

CASUALTIES & LOSSES

- Deaths (Notable): [TBD] Deaths (Numbers): High casualties on both sides (exact numbers lost to time) Other Losses: [TBD]

OUTCOME

- Victor: Indecisive / no clear winner Terms/Results: The struggle continues. Neither side gains a definitive advantage at GreyNest. Immediate Consequences: Underscores that even as diplomacy rose (Treaty of Oahiat was being negotiated), war still raged in tandem.

LONG-TERM IMPACT

- Political Changes: Minimal - the indecisive result means neither side gains lasting advantage from GreyNest itself. Social Changes: [TBD] How History Remembers It: GreyNest's legacy endures primarily in songs and oral tradition rather than political records. Details of the battle are sparse in surviving records. Commemorations: Remembered through folk songs rather than official histories.

ROLE IN NARRATIVE

- Book/Chapter: [TBD] POV Character(s): [TBD] Significance to Plot: Could serve as source material for in-world songs or ballads. The "forgotten battle" quality gives it a melancholic, folkloric texture. Scenes Set During: [TBD]

NOTES

- The fact that this battle survives in songs rather than records is a worldbuilding detail worth preserving - it suggests a rich oral tradition in Aicruae where the common people remember what the official histories forget. [8,248 BR]
- Event: The Treaty of Oahiat Location: Oahiat [specific location TBD] Key Figures: Maikor [full name TBD], Oahiat [likely a place or family name - children of both parties involved] Significance: A blood treaty that married Maikor's children to Oahiat's children, intended to temporarily stop fighting with Pireaynea. The treaty brought a fragile peace by uniting two factions through marriage binding them by blood rather than diplomacy alone. While it did not fully conquer or resolve the conflict with Pireaynea, it bought a period of respite and created a tense alliance. Occurred in the same year as (and a couple months after) the Battle of GreyNest, illustrating how diplomacy and warfare ran on parallel tracks during this period. Book Reference: [TBD]

THE DISPUTE AT TERICAER (8,226 BR)

BASIC INFORMATION

THE WAR OF WORLD'S END (War of Fera / Destruction of House Baliva) (8,201 BR - 8,152 BR)

BASIC INFORMATION

- Event Name: The War of World's End (also called the War of Fera) Date: 8,201 BR —8, 152 BR (approximately 49 years) Location: Aicruae - multiple regions; widespread Duration: ~ 49 years Type: Generational Blood Feud / Noble House War

CONTEXT

- What Led to This: The Dispute at Tericaer (8, 226BR) left House Baliva humiliated and hungry for revenge. The rivalry between Arvento and Baliva - already simmering since the Battle of Aishae (8,704 BR) - escalated into a full-scale blood feud that consumed both houses for nearly half a century. Political Climate: Two of Aicruae's most powerful noble houses locked in a war of annihilation. The conflict destabilized the region for decades, drawing in other houses and draining resources across the kingdom. Key Tensions: House Arvento vs. House Baliva; generational vengeance; the inability of either side to accept anything less than the other's total destruction.

PARTICIPANTS

- Side A: Leader: House Arvento [multiple generations of leaders over 49 years] Forces: Arvento armies Allies: Other houses drawn into the conflict (eventually including House Vika at the final battle)

Side B: Leader: House Baliva [multiple generations of leaders over 49 years] Forces: Baliva armies Allies: [TBD]

Neutral Parties/Observers: The crown (House Patton) - unclear how directly involved they were during the war's middle years.

KEY FIGURES INVOLVED

- [Multiple Arvento and Baliva lords across generations - specific names TBD] House Vika leadership [at the final Battle of Afera]

WHAT HAPPENED

- Summary: The rivalry between House Arvento and House Baliva erupted into a century-long blood feud that nearly destroyed both great houses. Generations of warriors perished and entire estates burned in back-and-forth vengeance. The war drew in other houses and destabilized the region for decades before finally concluding with House Baliva's complete ruin. Phase 1 (8,201 BR): Open war erupts between Arvento and Baliva. Phase 2(8, 200 s — 8, 170 sBR) : Decades of tit-for-tat warfare. Entire estates burned, generations of warriors killed on both sides. Other houses drawn into the conflict. Phase 3(8, 160 sBR) : The Kalip Plague sweeps through war-torn lands, devastating already weakened populations and pressuring both sides toward exhaustion. Phase 4(8, 152 — 8, 151BR) : The final engagement at the Battle of Afera ends the war with House Baliva's total defeat. Turning Point: The Kalip Plague weakens both sides to the point of desperation, making the final battle inevitable. Resolution: House Baliva is destroyed as a noble line.

CASUALTIES & LOSSES

- Deaths (Notable): [Multiple generations of Arvento and Baliva lords - specific names TBD] Deaths (Numbers): Massive - generations of warriors on both sides, plus civilian casualties from the Kalip Plague Other Losses: Entire estates destroyed. Both houses nearly ruined. Regional stability shattered for decades.

OUTCOME

- Victor: House Arvento and its allies (particularly House Vika at the final battle) Terms/Results: House Baliva falls - destroyed as a noble line. Erased from the political landscape. Immediate Consequences: One of Arvento's chief rivals is permanently eliminated. House Vika's prominence rises due to its role in the final battle.

LONG-TERM IMPACT

- Political Changes: The destruction of House Baliva removes a major power from Aicruae's political landscape, redistributing influence among surviving houses. House Arvento emerges victorious but scarred. House Vika gains further prestige. Social Changes: Decades of war leave entire regions depopulated and economically devastated. The Kalip Plague's toll compounds the damage. How History Remembers It: As one of the most destructive conflicts in Aicruan history - a cautionary tale about how unchecked rivalry between great houses can consume everything. Commemorations: [TBD]

ROLE IN NARRATIVE

- Book/Chapter: [TBD] POV Character(s): [TBD] Significance to Plot: The defining conflict of

Aicruae's middle history. The destruction of House Baliva reshapes the noble landscape that exists in the story's present. Scenes Set During: [TBD]

NOTES

- The full arc: Battle of Aishae (8, 704BR) → Dispute at Tericaer (8, 226BR) → War of World's End (8, 201 — 8, 152BR) → Battle of Afera (8, 151BR). Five hundred years from first clash to final destruction.

THE KALIP PLAGUE (Battle of Jatlya) (8,160s BR)

BASIC INFORMATION

- Event Name: The Kalip Plague (associated with the Battle of Jatlya) Date: 8,160 s BR (approximate - peak likely just before the Battle of Afera) Location: War-torn regions of Aicruae; widespread Duration: [TBD — likely years] Type: Pandemic / Wartime Catastrophe

CONTEXT

— What Led to This: Armies traversing the countryside during the closing years of the War of World's End spread disease rapidly through already weakened populations. Political Climate: Decades of continuous warfare between House Arvento and House Baliva had devastated the land. Communities were already weakened by famine, displacement, and constant violence. Key Tensions: Survival against disease in a war zone; the compounding horror of plague on top of generational conflict.

PARTICIPANTS

- Not a battle in the traditional sense - the plague struck both sides indiscriminately. Hailea Kulio Helped treat people suffering from this plague.

KEY FIGURES INVOLVED

— [No specific figures recorded]

WHAT HAPPENED

- Summary: A devastating plague referred to as "Kalip" swept through the war-torn lands during the closing years of the War of World's End. As armies moved through the countryside, the disease spread rapidly, decimating populations already weakened by decades of war. Corpses piled up in villages, and even noble manors were not spared. Phase 1: Plague emerges in war-torn territory (exact origin unknown). Phase 2: Armies serve as vectors, carrying disease across regions as they march. Phase 3: Civilian and military populations alike are devastated. Turning Point: The plague's toll on both sides pressures the warring houses toward a final, desperate engagement - the Battle of Afera. Resolution: The plague likely burns itself out as populations are decimated and the war ends. [A plague that caused vomiting, spotting, and eventually the loss of the ability to breathe.]

CASUALTIES & LOSSES

- Deaths (Notable): [TBD] Deaths (Numbers): [TBD - massive but unrecorded] Other Losses: Entire villages depopulated. Infrastructure already strained by war collapses further.

OUTCOME

- Victor: No one. Terms/Results: Both sides weakened to the point of exhaustion, contributing to the willingness to end the war in one final battle. Immediate Consequences: Accelerates the end of the War of World's End by making continued fighting unsustainable.

LONG-TERM IMPACT

- Political Changes: Contributed to the exhaustion that ended the War of World's End. Social Changes: Depopulated entire regions. Compounded the generational trauma of the war. How History Remembers It: A grim footnote of the War of World's End - the plague that killed what the swords hadn't. Commemorations: [TBD]

ROLE IN NARRATIVE

- Book/Chapter: [TBD] POV Character(s): [TBD] Significance to Plot: [TBD] Scenes Set During: [TBD]

NOTES

—Little is recorded about the Kalip Plague's specifics. Its connection to the "Battle of Jatlya" is noted in the source material but the battle itself lacks detail - the plague may have been more significant than the fighting. The timing (peak in the 8,160 s BR , right before Afera) suggests the plague was the final straw that forced both sides into that last desperate engagement.

THE BATTLE OF AFERA (8, 151BR)

BASIC INFORMATION

- Event Name: The Battle of Afera Date: 8,151 BR Location: Afera [specific geography TBD] Duration: [TBD] Type: Decisive Battle / End of a Generational War

CONTEXT

- What Led to This: Decades of warfare during the War of World's End, compounded by the Kalip Plague, brought both House Arvento and House Baliva to the point of exhaustion. A final confrontation became inevitable. Political Climate: Both houses were devastated. The war had drawn in allies on both sides. House Vika joined the coalition against Baliva, bringing fresh strength to the Arvento-led alliance. Key Tensions: The final reckoning of a 49-year blood feud. Total victory or total destruction - nothing in between.

PARTICIPANTS

—Side A (Coalition): Leader: House Vika [Commander TBD] Forces: Coalition army Allies: House Arvento, other allied houses

Side B: Leader: House Baliva [Commander TBD] Forces: Baliva's remaining army Allies: [TBD likely few remaining by this point]

Neutral Parties/Observers: [TBD]

KEY FIGURES INVOLVED

-[Vika Commander - Name TBD]: Led the coalition forces. [Baliva Commander - Name TBD]: Led Baliva's last stand.

WHAT HAPPENED

- Summary: Allied forces led by House Vika confronted House Baliva's army at Afera in one of the final clashes of the War of World's End. The coalition crushed Baliva's forces, effectively ending the war and destroying House Baliva as a noble line. Phase 1: Coalition assembles under House Vika's leadership. Phase 2: Engagement at Afera. Phase 3: Baliva's forces are overwhelmed and destroyed. Turning Point: House Vika's participation as the coalition's spearhead provides the decisive edge. Resolution: House Baliva is completely defeated and destroyed.

CASUALTIES & LOSSES

- Deaths (Notable): [Baliva leadership - presumed killed or executed] Deaths (Numbers): [TBD] Other Losses: House Baliva ceases to exist as a noble line.

OUTCOME

- Victor: The Arvento-Vika coalition Terms/Results: House Baliva is destroyed. The War of World's End is over. Immediate Consequences: One of Aicruae's great houses is erased from the political landscape. House Vika's prominence rises sharply due to its leadership role.

LONG-TERM IMPACT

- Political Changes: The destruction of House Baliva permanently reshapes Aicruae's noble hierarchy. House Arvento's chief rival is gone. House Vika cements itself as a major military power. Social Changes: Regions formerly under Baliva's control must be redistributed or absorbed. How History Remembers It: As the final battle of one of the most destructive wars in Aicruan history - the moment House Baliva was wiped from existence. Commemorations: [TBD]

ROLE IN NARRATIVE

- Book/Chapter: [TBD] POV Character(s): [TBD] Significance to Plot: The end of the Arvento-Baliva feud. The noble landscape that exists in the story's present is a direct consequence of this battle. Scenes Set During: [TBD]

NOTES

—House Vika is credited with leading the final assault, not House Arvento — interesting given that the war was fundamentally Arvento's feud. This suggests Arvento was too weakened by decades of fighting (and the Kalip Plague) to deliver the killing blow alone. Vika's role here mirrors their role at the Battle of Summers - they're the kingmakers, the house that shows up at the decisive moment.

[8,126 BR]

—Event: The Arvento Code Location: Aicruae (House Arvento's territories) Key Figures: House Arvento's scholars and jurists Significance: During a time of relative peace following the War of World's End, House Arvento's scholars compiled a comprehensive legal code known as the Arvento Code. It standardized principles of fair taxation, trade rights, and port regulations across Aicruae. The Arvento Code became the de facto constitution of Aicruae's kingdom - so well-crafted that when Aicruae later grew into an empire, these laws heavily influenced the Imperial Code that governed all nations. Note: The Arvento Code builds on the foundation of Saint Argellon's Code of Esa but is a distinct, later legal document focused on practical governance rather than moral philosophy. Book Reference: [TBD]

[8,094 BR]

—Event: The Taguar Murders Location: The imperial capital [likely Lajazer or its predecessor] Key Figures: [Victims — multiple nobles from prominent houses; perpetrators unknown] Significance: A wave of mysterious assassinations claimed the lives of multiple nobles in the capital. Unlike the open rebellions of previous centuries, the Taguar killers struck from the shadows - suggesting organized clandestine activity against the ruling class. The murders created paranoia among the elite. In response, the great houses realized that discontent had seeped into the heart of their domains, and drastic measures were needed to reassert control. The Taguar Murders directly prompted the formation of the Council of the Forsaken three years later. Book Reference: [TBD]

[8,051 BR]

- Event: Formation of the Council of the Forsaken Location: Aicruae (secret formation among three noble houses) Key Figures: House Arvento, House Aedria, House Caraen Significance: In the aftermath of the Taguar Murders, three influential noble houses - Arvento, Aedria, and Caraen struck a secret pact. They formed the Council of the Forsaken, an underground alliance tasked with rooting out traitors and vigilantes among the populace. This clandestine council effectively policed the commoners in all territories under those three houses, operating in the shadows to prevent any repeat of noble assassinations or conspiracies. The Council represents a dark turn - the nobility's response to being hunted was not reform but secret surveillance and control. Book Reference: [TBD]

THE SIEGE OF HIGHWATER (7,463 BR)

BASIC INFORMATION

- Event Name: The Siege of Highwater Date: 7,463 BR Location: Aicruae's capital (during a historic flood called Highwater) Duration: [TBD] Type: Popular Uprising / Siege

CONTEXT

— What Led to This: Inspired by the events of Bloody Winter (nearly 800 years earlier), continued inequality between the noble class and the common people festered across centuries. A historic flood - called Highwater - coincided with or triggered the uprising. Political Climate: Centuries of accumulated class resentment. The memory of Bloody Winter had proven that the nobility could be challenged. The flood may have exacerbated existing hardships, pushing the population past the breaking point. Key Tensions: Extreme inequality; the legacy of Bloody Winter; peasant fury vs. entrenched noble power.

PARTICIPANTS

- Side A: Leader: [Peasant/rebel leaders - names TBD] Forces: Mobs of peasants and disenfranchised soldiers Allies: [TBD]

Side B: Leader: The noble government / crown Forces: Royal forces, noble retainers Allies: [TBD]

Neutral Parties/Observers: [TBD]

KEY FIGURES INVOLVED

—[Specific figures TBD]

WHAT HAPPENED

- Summary: Furious at continued inequality, mobs of peasants and disenfranchised soldiers laid siege to Aicruae's capital during a historic flood, attempting to topple the noble government. Phase 1: Historic flooding (Highwater) strikes the capital region. Phase 2: Mobs of peasants and disenfranchised soldiers seize on the chaos. Phase 3: Siege of the capital begins - the rebels attempt to topple the noble government. Turning Point: [TBD] Resolution: [TBD - outcome not specified in source material]

CASUALTIES & LOSSES

- Deaths (Notable): [TBD] Deaths (Numbers): [TBD] Other Losses: [TBD]

OUTCOME

- Victor: [TBD - unclear from source material] Terms/Results: [TBD] Immediate Consequences: [TBD]

LONG-TERM IMPACT

- Political Changes: [TBD] Social Changes: [TBD] How History Remembers It: As the culmination of centuries of class resentment - the direct descendant of Bloody Winter. The largest popular uprising against Aicruae's nobility. Commemorations: [TBD]

ROLE IN NARRATIVE

- Book/Chapter: [TBD] POV Character(s): [TBD] Significance to Plot: The endpoint of the class conflict arc that runs from Little Hill → Bears → Bloody Winter → Highwater. This is where centuries of "the royal family is not untouchable" thinking finally erupts at full scale. Scenes Set During: [TBD]

NOTES

- The source material describes Highwater as being "inspired by the events of Bloody Winter" - 800 years of inherited rage. This is the payoff of the seed planted in 8,259 BR. Note: Mekar Hige founded House Hige during this period (7,489 BR), timing his announcement to avoid the chaos of the Siege. House Hige's founding is directly shaped by the instability Highwater created.

THE BATTLE OF RELIRIAN (7,402 BR)

BASIC INFORMATION

- Event Name: The Battle of Relirian - Death of Saint Reron Date: 7,402 BR Location: Relirian [specific geography TBD] Duration: [TBD - likely a single engagement] Type: Final Battle / Saint's Last Stand

CONTEXT

— What Led to This: Saint Reron's bloody campaign of vengeance. After corrupt officials murdered his wife and eldest daughter, Reron rescued his youngest child, hid her, and embarked on a one-man reign of terror - slaughtering villages and "ending worlds." Forces from across the land united to stop him. Political Climate: A world terrified of a single man wielding a god's power for destruction. Reron's rampage had gone beyond revenge into apocalyptic violence. Multiple factions set aside their differences to confront him. Key Tensions: Reron's grief-fueled rage vs. the world's desperate need to stop him; the question of whether divine power in human hands can ever be controlled.

PARTICIPANTS

—Side A: Leader: Saint Reron (alone or with minimal followers) Forces: Reron himself — wielding the full fury of Vapaz's power Allies: None

Side B: Leader: [Coalition leaders - names TBD] Forces: Allied forces from across the land - those responsible for his family's death and those who simply wanted to end his killing spree Allies: Multiple factions united against a common threat

Neutral Parties/Observers: The gods (watching from their realm)

KEY FIGURES INVOLVED

—Saint Reron: The twelfth and final saint. “Ender of Worlds.” Blessed by Vapaz. Age 48 at death.

WHAT HAPPENED

- Summary: Forces responsible for Reron’s family’s destruction – along with many who simply wanted to end his killing spree – ambushed Reron at Relirian. The battle was apocalyptic. Reron, now a one-man harbinger of destruction, unleashed the full fury of Vapaz’s power and ensured no enemy left the battlefield alive. When the smoke cleared, Reron himself lay dead amid a pile of his slaughtered foes. Phase 1: Coalition forces converge on Relirian to ambush Reron. Phase 2: Reron unleashes Vapaz’s full power. Phase 3: Total mutual annihilation – every combatant on both sides is killed. Turning Point: There is no turning point. The battle is a one-way escalation to total destruction. Resolution: Everyone dies. Reron falls at age 48.

CASUALTIES & LOSSES

- Deaths (Notable): Saint Reron (age 48) Deaths (Numbers): Total – no one leaves the battlefield alive on either side. Other Losses: The last of the original line of Saints is dead.

OUTCOME

- Victor: No one. Mutual annihilation. Terms/Results: Reron dies. His enemies die. The battlefield is a graveyard. Immediate Consequences: Reron’s violent saga ends. His surviving young daughter disappears into history.

LONG-TERM IMPACT

- Political Changes: The era of Saints effectively ends with Reron’s death. The gods do not inter his body in their realm – a pointed rejection. Social Changes: Reron becomes a “taboo” saint. Debate rages for generations over whether he was ever truly a saint or simply a monster with a god’s power. Some sympathize, noting all his violence was to avenge his brutally wronged family. Others see only the horror. How History Remembers It: As the apocalyptic end of the original line of Saints. A battlefield where no one survived. The darkest possible conclusion to the divine experiment of empowering mortals. Commemorations: [TBD — likely controversial; some may honor him in secret while others refuse to speak his name]

ROLE IN NARRATIVE

—Book/Chapter: [TBD] POV Character(s): [TBD] Significance to Plot: The end of the Saints’ era. Reron’s story is the ultimate cautionary tale about what happens when divine power meets human injustice. Any character debating the morality of power in the story’s present would reference Relirian. Scenes Set During: [TBD]

NOTES

- Reron’s story exposes the dark potential of divine power twisted by human cruelty. He didn’t choose to become a monster – he was made into one by the very people who then had to destroy him. The fact that the gods refuse him burial in their realm while some mortals sympathize with him creates a lasting moral ambiguity. His surviving daughter’s disappearance is an unresolved thread – worth tracking in the story bible.

-Event: Birth of Emperor Goteivati III / The Calendar Resets (Start of the Reconstruction Epoch) Location: Aicruae – the imperial capital Key Figures: Empress Crandona Sarleia Patton (mother), Goteivati Zivc Patton III (the child) Significance: The calendar resets at 0 AR with the birth of Goteivati Zivc Patton III to Empress Crandona Sarleia Patton. The event is referred to as the start of “Reconstruction” – hence the switch from BR (Before Reconstruction) to AR (After Reconstruction). His birth was hailed with grand omens and celebration, but those festivities proved darkly ironic. The epochal calendar change signifies that nothing would be the same after this point. Goteivati III’s life would divide history itself – BR marks the years before his birth, AR marks the years after, much as BC/AD functions in other dating systems. Empress Crandona’s joy at her newborn son would be short-lived; she had brought forth the child who would one day destroy the very world she knew. Book Reference: [TBD]

[~25 AR]

- Event: Goteivati III Ascends the Throne / Beginning of the Dark Age Location: Aicruae - the imperial capital Key Figures: Emperor Goteivati Zivc Patton III Significance: As a young man (likely in his early twenties), Emperor Goteivati Z. Patton III assumed power. Almost immediately, his rule turned tyrannical. He plunged the empire into a Dark Age, learning none of the lessons of his forebears and reversing centuries of progress and tolerance. Governance became brutally repressive - dissent was crushed and fear permeated daily life. His early reign was marked by persecution of former reformers, purges of officials associated with the Arvento Code and Infant Laws, and wanton cruelty. He earned a reputation for sadism and violence that exceeded even the worst of his ancestors. This period, known as the Dark Ages of The Empire, saw knowledge suppressed and infrastructure decay.

By centralizing all power and terror in himself, Goteivati began to unravel the fabric of the once-great empire. Book Reference: [TBD]

[~35 AR]

- Event: "Goteivati the Damned" - The Murder of the Imperial Family Location: The imperial palace Key Figures: Emperor Goteivati Zivc Patton III, the Empress (his wife, name TBD), her lover (name TBD), the imperial children Significance: Emperor Goteivati III cemented his infamy with a series of heinous personal crimes. He discovered his wife's infidelity - she had taken a lover to seek the affection absent in her marriage. In a gruesome act of revenge, Goteivati murdered the lover, had him dismembered, and forced the Empress to consume pieces of her dead lover's flesh. He then killed his wife and their innocent children. Having destroyed his own family, he publicly renounced the empire's traditional values and mocked the old Matsiali culture of his forebears as weak and corrupt. It was after these atrocities that people began to whisper the name "Goteivati the Damned." Many believed he was cursed by the gods or favored by darker powers. His name became synonymous with absolute depravity. From this point forward, no Empress of Aicruae would ever again name a son Goteivati. Book Reference: [TBD]

[36 AR]

-Event: Abolition of Matsiali Culture / Establishment of Pataoiut Location: Empire-wide (decree issued from the capital) Key Figures: Emperor Goteivati Zivc Patton III Significance: In the wake of his bloody deeds, Goteivati III issued an imperial decree condemning the old Matsiali culture - a culture that had long valued female leadership, sexual freedom, and a balance of power between genders. He declared that "men are superior, by divine design" and that the liberated ways of Matsiali were an offense to the gods. He systematically dismantled Matsiali traditions: women were stripped of positions of authority, matriarchal inheritance rights were revoked, and female education was outlawed. In its place, he imposed Pataoiut - an aggressively conservative, male-dominated ideology demanding worship of men as earthly representatives of divine will. Under Pataoiut, women were forced into subservience and men exalted in all things. Temples were rededicated to male saints and gods. Texts praising past empresses or female heroes were destroyed. The cultural revolution fundamentally remade societal norms - the very language and customs of the empire changed to reflect male superiority. An empire that once honored saints like Duri and Siriande now preached that women's only role was to serve men. Goteivati's rejection of Matsiali and creation of Pataoiut amounted to erasing the empire's former identity and recasting it in his own image. Book Reference: [TBD]

[~40 AR]

—Event: Pataoiut Religious Reform / Worship of Men Location: Empire-wide Key Figures: Emperor Goteivati Zivc Patton III Significance: Alongside the cultural shift, Goteivati III instituted Pataoiut religious practices. Declaring that "men are to be worshipped as gods on earth," he positioned himself and all patriarchs as objects of reverence. Statues of reigning men replaced icons of goddesses in shrines. The sub-religion of Leneyez - which had involved sacrificial offerings to please the gods - was twisted to focus on sacrifices honoring the Emperor and male ancestors. Priests proclaimed the male form sacred by design. Female participation in clergy was banned. Goteivati's own name was incorporated into daily prayers. He elevated the male ego to divinity, turning blasphemy into state dogma. Many commoners secretly viewed these changes as heresy, but dissent was ruthlessly crushed by imperial agents - including remnants of the Council of the Forsaken, now repurposed to enforce Pataoiut orthodoxy. Centuries of faith in a balanced pantheon were upended virtually overnight. Goteivati's transformation of religion completed his goal: to make himself the singular object of loyalty and fear. Book Reference: [TBD]

[~50 AR]

—Event: The Reconstruction Period and Its Aftermath Location: Empire-wide Key Figures: Emperor Goteivati Zivc Patton III (architect of the destruction) Significance: The era following Goteivati III's reign was one of shock and adaptation.

The term "Reconstruction" - which gave the calendar its name - referred to Goteivati's claim of rebuilding society according to his male-dominated vision. In practice, it was a period of cultural destruction and forced realignment. The once enlightened empire was fundamentally changed: its old liberal, female-respecting Matsiali character was gone, replaced by the repressive Pataoiut order. The empire contracted and stagnated. Many conquered provinces rebelled or drifted away, sensing the central authority's madness. Knowledge and arts from the Saints' era were lost or driven underground. The legacy of Goteivati III was a shattered society: population decline from purges and possibly famine (as female-driven agricultural cooperatives dissolved), regional governors turning into warlords under the banner of "men's divine right," and an overall descent into what later historians unapologetically call the Dark Ages of the Empire. Location: Small village in the Eriata District, Kingdom of Atriki (south of Elgan)

Key Figures: Minara Gonia, Siadou Gonia (killed), Imperial Enforcers

Siadou Gonia - Minara's adoptive mother and the Empress's former maid who secretly rescued infant Minara from execution - is killed before Minara's eyes. The entire village is slaughtered. This event shatters Minara's innocence, creates her deep hatred for nobles, and drives the entire plot of Crown of Glory.

Location: Solisian Academy, Tarmet

Key Figures: Minara Gonia, Duke and Duchess Catern, Dahnyliein Catern, Nivaeran Veir

Event: Demon Attack on the Academy - Minara Saves the Crown Prince

Location: Solisian Academy

Key Figures: Minara Gonia, Crown Prince Elleraian Betenadia Patton

Significance: During a monster/demon attack on the school, Minara stays to fight rather than flee and saves Crown Prince Elleraian's life. This earns her recognition, popularity, and the prince's gratitude - none of them yet knowing they are half-siblings. Minara begins to realize she doesn't hate nobles; she hates the feeling of powerlessness.

Location: Remote lakeside area near the Academy

Key Figures: Minara Gonia, Dahnyliein Catern, Nivaeran Veir, Professor Leranoan Gevhilem (Soli)

Nivaeran reveals this isn't the first time - Minara has been sleepwalking since arriving at the Academy. Professor Leranoan later confirms it was the work of a Valoka (a dream-plane demon). This is the first indication that a sinister force - Renedin - is specifically targeting Minara. Dahnyliein becomes overprotective after nearly losing her.

Book Reference: A Crown of Glory (Book 4), Ch 14

Event: The Prophecy Discovered

Location: Solisian Academy Archives

Key Figures: Minara Gonia, Professor Leranoan Gevhilem (Soli)

Significance: The group discovers an ancient prophecy: "When the Eclipsing Sun and the False Star meet, the old god shall shatter the world." Sir Tonhe, Elleraian's biological father, is revealed to be a distant descendant of Snieoa Patton. This event takes the team's only healer off the field at the worst possible time.
